BIOGRAPHIES of the PRESIDENTS of the UNITED STATES

George Washington (1732-1799)

Term 1789-1797, FIRST PRESIDENT

The high courage and strong but disciplined will of George Washington brought endurance and purpose to the cause of American independence. The son of a planter, he was born on the Virginia frontier. His schooling, inspired by his brother, Lawrence, and fostered by family friends, consisted largely of mathematics and military skills. At sixteen he was earning his own living as a surveyor. At twenty-one he had completed a hazardous mission through the wilderness to the Ohio country. Other important military and civic activities rapidly followed. In 1759 he married Martha Custis and began the extensive development of the Mount Vernon estate. Armed conflict called him in 1775 to the command of the Continental Army. Throughout the long and difficult struggle which followed, Washington held the ragged, unpaid, and hungry soldiers together until final victory came. From a well-deserved retirement he was called to preside at the Constitutional Convention. Unanimously chosen the first President of the United States, unanimously re-elected, he declined a third term. He died at Mount Vernon, universally regarded as the first American—an inspiring leader who thought and acted nationally, and became “first in the hearts of his countrymen.”

Term 1797-1801, SECOND PRESIDENT

John Adams was one of the most learned of the public men of his day. He had been sent to Harvard College to prepare for the ministry; but upon graduation, he chose the law for his career. In 1764 he married Abigail Smith, a brilliant and capable woman, who, in her own right, became one of the famous characters of American history. Noteworthy success came to John Adams in law and in civic affairs. In the troubled time of 1770 he won a seat in the Massachusetts Assembly. Deep concern about Colonial grievances inspired his leadership against the mother country. No one saw more clearly than he that the logical outcome of resistance would be war and independence. The fervent patriotism of John Adams gave direction to the Continental Congress, certainty to the Declaration of Independence—and resulted in his selection to represent the United States abroad. He negotiated a loan from Holland, participated in making a favorable peace, and served as the first minister to Great Britain. In 1788 John Adams returned from Europe in time to have his ability, distinction, and achievement rewarded with the vice-presidency of the United States, the first man to be so honored. As a candidate of the Federalist party, he defeated Thomas Jefferson in 1796, and became the only man to serve eight years as Vice-President and then to become President.

Thomas Jefferson (1743-1826)

Term 1801-1809, THIRD PRESIDENT

Thomas Jefferson's estimate of his own greatest achievements is indicated by the simple epitaph he asked to be inscribed on his tomb: “Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, Author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and Father of the University of Virginia.” Jefferson was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, the son of a frontiersman and of Jane Randolph of the prominent Virginia Randolphs. From his mother and his classical education at the College of William and Mary he acquired the social graces and tastes of quality which gave distinguished charm to his personality; but the wisdom of his philosophy and the practicality of his politics were outgrowths of the frontier democracy of his childhood. Jefferson was probably the most versatile leader of his time. Skilled in horsemanship, music, drawing, mathematics, architecture, writing, education, farm management, law, and diplomacy, he had a genius for using these varied abilities to strengthen his own leadership and to improve the public welfare. It was Jefferson's sense of the need for security and expansion which helped in obtaining approval of the treaty for the purchase of Louisiana, and thus laid the basis for the future greatness of the United States. The Lewis and Clark Expedition also stimulated western settlement and commerce.

Term 1809-1817, FOURTH PRESIDENT

James Madison was preparing for the ministry, shortly after his graduation from Princeton, when the need for public leadership sought him out to head the Orange County Committee on Public Safety. His father owned a large estate in Orange County, Virginia, although James had been born at Port Conway in King George County some few miles away. The stirring demands of the Revolutionary period and the first years of the new Republic found expression in Madison's constructive skill, drafted to help write the state constitution of Virginia. He was twice elected as member of the state legislature and he was chosen a delegate to the Continental Congress and the Constitutional Convention. In the writing of the federal Constitution, and in the struggle over its ratification, Madison reached the peak of his public achievement. He earned the title, “Father of the Constitution.” No man did more to perfect the instrument itself or to obtain its acceptance. Madison did all that he could to prevent the War of 1812. Ironically, his opponents called it, “Mr. Madison's War.” Despite his genius at constitution-making, Madison had no genuine liking for the political arena, and welcomed retirement to his beautiful home, “Montpelier,” in Orange County. Here his wife, the gracious “Dolly,” continued her fame as a brilliant hostess, while Madison enjoyed his books and farming until his death at the age of eighty-five.

Term 1817-1825, FIFTH PRESIDENT

James Monroe was the fourth Virginian to become President of the United States. He was born in Westmoreland County, the son of a planter of modest means. His college career at William and Mary was interrupted by his enlistment in the Colonial Army. After the war, Monroe turned to the practice of law and was soon immersed in politics. He represented his native state in the Assembly, in the Continental Congress, and in the United States Senate. President Washington appointed him minister to France; and, on his return, he was elected governor of Virginia. Under President Madison he served as Secretary of State and as Secretary of War. Few men have been better qualified by training and experience for the national presidency to which he was elected by the Democratic-Republican party in 1816. There was no opposition to his re-election four years later. The chief events of Monroe's administration were the pronouncement of the independent position of the Western Hemisphere (later to become famous as the Monroe Doctrine), the Anglo-American peace pledge over the Canadian border, the Florida Purchase from Spain, and the Missouri Compromise. He died in New York City at the age of seventy-three—five years after his retirement from a life of devoted service to his country.

Term 1825-1829, SIXTH PRESIDENT

John Adams was a great American, but perhaps in both learning and achievement his son, John Quincy Adams, surpassed him. The younger Adams received his early education in Europe. Exceptionally brilliant, he was secretary to the United States minister to Russia at fourteen. Later he was graduated from Harvard, and soon gained admission to the Massachusetts bar. President Washington appointed him minister to Holland; then, in turn, he became minister to Prussia, England, and Russia. Before going to Berlin, he married Louisa Johnson, whose father was the United States Consul in London. In 1814 Adams was one of the commissioners who negotiated the peace with Great Britain at Ghent, bringing to an end the War of 1812. Under President Monroe, Adams became a bold and successful Secretary of State. Adams' ideas prompted the National-Republican party to select him as its nominee in 1824. The election failed to return a majority, and Adams was chosen President by the House of Representatives. Adams sought to improve governmental efficiency and to extend foreign commerce. His concept of public service has been rarely, if ever, surpassed. He was more interested in being right and in the general good than he was in gaining popularity and in extending political patronage.

Andrew Jackson (1767-1845)Term 1829-1837, SEVENTH PRESIDENT

Already a renowned Indian fighter, General Andrew Jackson emerged a national hero from the amazing victory of American frontiersmen over British regulars at New Orleans in 1815. In 1780, at the age of thirteen, he had fought the British in the Battle of Hanging Rock. An orphan at seventeen, he began the study of law, and was admitted to practice three years later. Within a year he was appointed prosecuting attorney for the western part of North Carolina (now Tennessee). He removed to Nashville, and in 1791 married Rachel Robards. One of the framers of Tennessee's constitution, he became, in quick succession, United States Representative and Senator, and judge of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. Impulsive and headstrong, his flaming energy carried him into quarrels, duels, and political conflicts. The western frontier was seething with reaction against the "aristocratic" leadership of the East; and "Old Hickory" was the ideal border captain to lead the way to the White House, which he reached in 1828. "Jacksonian Democracy" was a political triumph for the "common man." It developed the "spoils system" strengthened the federal government over the states, and ended the United States Bank. Retiring after two terms to his beloved estate, "The Hermitage," near Nashville, he continued to influence party politics until his death in 1845.

Martin Van Buren (1782-1862)Term 1837-1841, EIGHTH PRESIDENT

At the age of fourteen, Martin Van Buren began the study of law while serving as office boy to the village lawyer at Kinderhook, New York, his native town. His interest in politics began even earlier, and by the age of eighteen he was an active party worker. Twice he was elected to the New York Senate; in 1821 he entered the United States Senate; for two months in 1829 he was governor of New York, but resigned to enter the Cabinet of President Jackson. Van Buren's vigorous support of Andrew Jackson in 1828 was rewarded with appointment as Secretary of State. Two years later he was chosen Vice-President. His loyalty and his political skill endeared him to President Jackson in such measure that Van Buren was selected to inherit the presidential mantle, which he received in the election of 1836. One of the most significant accomplishments of the period of his presidency was the creation of the independent treasury system. Martin Van Buren wrestled unsuccessfully with the reaction from the extremes of Jacksonian democracy. The Jackson inheritance proved too heavy a burden; and with other difficulties, it combined to prevent Van Buren's re-election. His interest in politics, however, continued for many years.

William Henry Harrison (1773-1841)Term 1841, NINTH PRESIDENT

The father of William Henry Harrison was a Virginian of prominent social position who served as governor of his state. He lived at Berkeley, in Charles City County, Virginia, where his son, William, was born. Young Harrison attended Hampden-Sidney College, and later studied medicine in Philadelphia; in 1791 he enlisted in the United States Army. He became a staff officer for General Wayne in the campaigns against the Indians of the Northwest Territory. Briefly he served as Secretary of the Northwest Territory and as a delegate from the Territory to the national Congress. From 1801 to 1812 he was governor of Indiana Territory. In this position he won acclaim as an Indian fighter, particularly for his victory at Tippecanoe. In the War of 1812 Harrison became a major-general in full command of the Northwest frontier. After the War of 1812, he served in both houses of the Congress, in the Ohio Senate, and as minister to Colombia. The Whigs persuaded Harrison to be their candidate in 1840 with John Tyler, another Virginian, as his running mate. "Tippecanoe and Tyler too" won an overwhelming victory in the log cabin and hard cider campaign. President Harrison died of pneumonia one month after his inauguration. His grandson, Benjamin Harrison, also became President.

John Tyler (1790-1862)Term 1841-1845, TENTH PRESIDENT

John Tyler became President by succession, at President Harrison's death, one month after the inauguration. Like Harrison, he was born in Charles City County of Virginia; and his father, like Harrison's, had been governor of Virginia. Young Tyler was graduated from William and Mary College at seventeen. At twenty-one he was a member of the state legislature. Later he represented Virginia in both houses of the Congress, with an intervening term as governor of his state. Consistently John Tyler opposed policies which strengthened the national government at the expense of the states. Although a Democrat, Tyler's forceful opposition to "Jacksonianism" had, in the eyes of the Whigs, made him appear desirable for the vice-presidency. They had not thought of the possibility of dealing with him as the President. Tyler's independent nature was shown in his decision to be President in the fullest sense and not merely a substitute as provided in the Constitution; thereby he set a precedent that has become the rule. His administration was marked by controversies with Congress, and by the trend toward territorial expansion; Texas was annexed shortly before the end of his term.

James K. Polk (1795-1849)Term 1845-1849, ELEVENTH PRESIDENT

An important issue in the campaign of 1844 was westward expansion, and closely bound up with it was the problem of the extension of slavery. Van Buren was the popular Democratic nominee for the presidency until he spoke against annexation. James Knox Polk, little known nationally, had received some mention for the vice-presidency; but it was his support of annexation which brought him the chance to be nominated and to be elected President. His administration became famous for the addition of Texas, California, New Mexico, Utah, Nevada, and the western part of Colorado to the United States; then also the "Oregon question" was settled. Polk was born in Mecklenburg County, North Carolina. In 1806 the family moved to Tennessee. After Polk had been graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1818 at the head of his class, he returned to Tennessee and began preparation in the law. Attracted to politics, Polk soon became a member of the state legislature. In 1824 he was elected to the Congress, and in 1835 he became Speaker of the House—the only Speaker ever to reach the presidency. He retired from the Congress in 1839, was for one term governor of Tennessee, and in 1844 emerged as the successful "dark horse" candidate for President. In 1824 he married Sarah Childress, who was notable as one of the most gracious of White House hostesses.

Zachary Taylor (1784-1850)Term 1849-1850, TWELFTH PRESIDENT

A few months after his birth in Orange County, Virginia, Zachary Taylor was taken by his parents by ox-cart to the Kentucky frontier. His boyhood was spent in the country near Louisville. An early desire to become a soldier was realized in 1808 when he joined the regular army. In the War of 1812 Taylor served with distinction. His brilliant defense of Fort Benjamin Harrison against a large force of Indians won him much acclaim. Later he led important commands against the Indians in Illinois and in Florida. By 1845 Taylor was a brigadier-general and in command of the troublesome Southwest. Ordered to the Rio Grande, he was attacked by the Mexicans; but he quickly won the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. Later, against heavy odds, he inspired his men to the new victory of Buena Vista. "Old Rough and Ready," as his soldiers admiringly called him, was a popular hero by 1848; and the Whigs chose him for their presidential candidate. An honest soldier, with no political ambitions or obligations, he protested against the "spoils system." It seemed that he might ease the tensions between the North and the South when suddenly he was stricken with fever and died—a little more than a year after his inauguration.

Millard Fillmore (1800-1874)Term 1850-1853, THIRTEENTH PRESIDENT

Millard Fillmore came to the presidency by the accident of President Taylor's death. His political life was a familiar pattern. State-wide success as a lawyer and terms in the New York state legislature and the national Congress placed him high in the councils of the Whig party. Fillmore came from a humble farm family of Cayuga County, New York. As a youth he was apprenticed to a clothier, but he rebelled and studied law instead. He worked for eight years as a clerk in a law office. This different apprenticeship prepared him for the New York bar and fitted him to become a partner in a prominent Buffalo firm. Fillmore's political competitors were men of unusual gifts in oratory when debating skill was at its political peak. Perhaps it was the rivalry among such masters as Clay, Calhoun, and Webster which played a part in giving lesser men an inning of recognition. The highly controversial Compromise of 1850 received Fillmore's support, although President Taylor had opposed it. President Fillmore also signed the Fugitive Slave Law, which further fired the controversy. President Fillmore failed to obtain renomination from the waning Whig party and never again held high political office; he spent the remainder of his life at his home in Buffalo, New York.

Franklin Pierce (1804-1869)

Term 1853-1857, FOURTEENTH PRESIDENT

When the Whigs nominated General Scott for the presidency in 1852, the Democrats sought a rival candidate, experienced in politics—with military glamour, and with political appeal to both Northern and Southern Democrats. Franklin Pierce was the successful nominee. Franklin Pierce was born at Hillsborough, New Hampshire, and was graduated from Bowdoin College, Maine, in the class of 1824, one class ahead of Longfellow and Hawthorne. Pierce studied law, gained admission to the bar in 1827, and two years later was a member of the New Hampshire legislature. In 1833 he was sent to the House of Representatives at Washington, and in 1837 he entered the Senate. When war was declared with Mexico, Pierce volunteered as a private, but was commissioned as a colonel. His political background, pleasing personality, and steady application brought rapid promotion; and he emerged from the war a brigadier-general. The Pierce administration made the Gadsden Purchase from Mexico, opened up Japanese ports to American traders, furthered plans for the first railroad across the continent to the Pacific, and approved the Kansas-Nebraska Bill—an act which brought the question of slavery extension squarely before the people. Franklin Pierce failed to satisfy his own party and was not renominated.

Term 1857-1861, FIFTEENTH PRESIDENT

James Buchanan was born in southwestern Pennsylvania near Mercersburg. In his sixteenth year he entered Dickinson College. After his graduation, he studied law and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one. While serving in the War of 1812, he was elected to the Pennsylvania legislature; and thus he began a long life of public service, including membership in both houses of the national Congress. He started his political career as a Federalist, but soon switched to the Democrats. President Jackson appointed him minister to Russia. He was President Polk's Secretary of State; and President Pierce made him the minister to Great Britain. Three times his name was placed before national nominating conventions as a candidate for the presidency, and in 1856 he was nominated and elected. Slavery and states' rights became flaming questions during his administration. Although he was convinced that slavery was morally wrong, he believed that, under the Constitution, he could not interfere with slavery or prevent secession. Buchanan's administration has been held as inadequate in a time of great crisis. Four Cabinet members resigned, partly in protest against his do-nothing policy. Before a new President could take over the faltering ship of state, South Carolina had seceded, the Confederacy was founded, and war loomed between the North and South.

Term 1861-1865, SIXTEENTH PRESIDENT

Whenever men speak of great leaders, the name of Abraham Lincoln is heard. No national leader has come from more humble beginnings, and none has achieved a more revered memory. Born in a log cabin, he was tested and trained by the rough, frontier life of Kentucky and Indiana. Of formal schooling he had almost none, but he was a devoted student of people and of the books that he could buy or borrow. In 1831 he settled in New Salem, Illinois. In turn, he was storekeeper, postmaster and surveyor—earning the high regard of his neighbors as "Honest Abe." Already marked for leadership, Lincoln moved to Springfield in 1837 and began the practice of law. He was elected to the state legislature, became successful as a circuit-riding lawyer, and served for one term as Representative in Congress. Lincoln's loyalty to the Union inspired his belief that the nation could not endure "half slave and half free." As the Republican candidate for Senator, he opposed the extension of slavery in the famous debates with Stephen A. Douglas. He lost the election, but he won a national renown which elected him President in 1860. War followed his inauguration. Confusion and disaster endangered the Union cause, but Lincoln's patient courage and supreme faith surmounted all obstacles. Five days after Lee's surrender, Lincoln was shot by the famous actor, John Wilkes Booth.

Term 1865-1869, SEVENTEENTH PRESIDENT

At the age of ten Andrew Johnson was apprenticed to a tailor. At that time he could neither read nor write. When he was eighteen, he left his birthplace, Raleigh, North Carolina—settling at Greenville in eastern Tennessee. The following year he married Eliza McCordle, who had a fair education; and she began at once to teach her husband reading, writing, and arithmetic. Spurred by his personal ambition, and with his wife's aid, Johnson acquired an ordinary education. Johnson became interested in politics as a Jacksonian Democrat. In 1830 he was elected mayor of Greenville; then, for several years he was a member of the state legislature; in 1843 he was sent to the House of Representatives at Washington; in 1853 he became governor of Tennessee; and in 1857 he entered the United States Senate. Although a sincere Southerner, he could not accept secession. He placed his faith and his devotion in the Union. This action separated him from the South and Lincoln appointed him military governor of Tennessee. Two years later he was chosen Vice-President. Lincoln's death thrust Johnson into a situation for which he seemed unfitted, but possibly no more so than were his associates. Politics led to impeachment proceedings; these failed, but Johnson was not renominated. Seven years later he was returned to the Senate.

Term 1869-1877, EIGHTEENTH PRESIDENT

Ulysses Simpson Grant was born at Point Pleasant, Clermont County, Ohio. He attended school and worked on his father's farm until, at the age of seventeen, he entered the Military Academy at West Point. Soon after his graduation, Grant took part in every important battle of the Mexican War, except Buena Vista; and he was twice cited for gallantry. In 1854 he resigned his captain's commission, and the next seven years saw Grant a dismal failure at farming, at selling real estate, and at clerking—the latter in his brother's store at Galena, Illinois. When war began in 1861, the Governor of Illinois put Grant to work at drilling recruits. Eight months later he was a major-general with brilliant victories to his credit. The North had found the military leader who could save the Union. The Republican party selected the victorious Grant for its candidate in 1868. Having no interest in politics, he reluctantly accepted the presidential honor which a grateful people awarded him. Grant's administration faced complex problems of reconstruction in the South, serious questions of national finance, and important matters in foreign policy. Despite difficulties, disagreements, and dissatisfactions, the Republicans returned him for a second term. He married Julia T. Dent of St. Louis, Missouri. He died at Mt. McGregor, New York, after a long illness.

Term 1877-1881, NINETEENTH PRESIDENT

The war record of Rutherford Birchard Hayes, distinctive with brave exploits and topped in 1865 by a major general's rank, gave him great prestige in his native state of Ohio. The state Republicans persuaded him to become a Congressman; and in 1867 he was elected Governor of Ohio. In 1875 he was chosen Governor for a third term, the first man in Ohio to gain this honor. The resulting acclaim brought to him national recognition and the Republican nomination for the presidency. In the campaign of 1876 he defeated Samuel J. Tilden by one electoral vote in a disputed election. His administration was peaceful and honorable. He fought for an improved civil service; and he opposed political patronage. Rutherford Hayes was unusually well educated. His first schooling was received from his widowed mother in the town of Delaware, Ohio. A kindly uncle sent him to a Connecticut academy and later to Kenyon College. At twenty he was graduated as the valedictorian and the youngest member of his class. He entered the Harvard University Law School, finished the course in two years, and in 1845 began the practice of law in Fremont, Ohio. Hayes married Lucy Ware Webb in 1852. They had seven sons and one daughter. He died at his Spiegel Grove estate, Fremont, Ohio.

James Abram Garfield (1831-1881)Term 1881, TWENTIETH PRESIDENT

Like most of the national leaders James A. Garfield came from sturdy pioneer stock. A Puritan ancestor was one of the founders of Watertown, Massachusetts, in 1630. His father, Abraham Garfield, moved to Ohio 200 years later, settling in Cuyahoga County—where James was born. The widowed mother and an older brother denied themselves to assure a good education for James. Life was hard on the frontier, and James helped to earn his own way by working at various jobs. He taught country school, attended Geauga Seminary, and then worked his way through Williams College, graduating with honors. Returning to Hiram, Ohio, he taught school, preached sermons, made political speeches, studied law, became principal of the Eclectic Institute at Hiram, and was admitted to the bar. When the war between the states broke out, Garfield received a commission and served so well that he attained the rank of major-general. While still in service, he was elected to the Congress as Representative from his Ohio district. In 1880 Republican factions, after much difficulty in selecting candidates, compromised by nominating Garfield for President, with Chester A. Arthur as his running mate. On July 2, a few months after his inauguration, the President was fatally shot by Charles Guiteau.

Chester Alan Arthur (1830-1886)Term 1881-1885, TWENTY-FIRST PRESIDENT

The choice of Chester A. Arthur in 1880 as nominee for the vice-presidency was the result of a settlement between two Republican factions. Thus, the incident of compromise plus the accident of President Garfield's death brought Arthur to the presidency. As Collector of the Port of New York, Arthur opposed President Hayes' attempt to bring his office, with its many small jobs, under the civil service, and he was removed from office by the President. The solemn obligations of the presidency changed Arthur's attitudes and actions. He served with ability and distinction. His old political associates were surprised as he now supported civil service reform and put the welfare of the country above party ambitions. By these actions he lost the support of his own political group, and he was not renominated. Arthur was born at Fairfield, Vermont, the eldest son of Reverend William Arthur. His school days began at Union Village in Washington County. At the age of eighteen he was graduated from Union College. He taught school while he studied law, became principal of an academy, and in 1853 he was admitted to the New York bar. Professional success came rapidly. In 1859 he married Ellen Lewis Herndon. During the war between the states, Arthur served as quartermaster-general of New York State Militia and successfully recruited and prepared troops for service at the front. During Arthur's administration the Pendleton Civil Service Act (1883) was enacted, and legislation was passed to modernize the U.S. Navy.

Grover Cleveland (1837-1908)Terms 1885-1889, 1893-1897, TWENTY-SECOND PRESIDENT AND TWENTY-FOURTH PRESIDENT

Grover Cleveland's birthplace was Caldwell, New Jersey. Later the family moved to Fayetteville, New York, where Grover attended the village school. At sixteen his father's death forced him to earn his own way. He studied law in Buffalo, New York, and was admitted to practice in 1859. Cleveland's political career started with his appointment as assistant district attorney of Erie County, and shortly afterward he was elected sheriff. The citizens of Buffalo were seeking a courageous and honest mayor to end a long period of political corruption. The Democrats nominated Cleveland, and to the surprise of the political bosses he was elected. Cleveland's zeal for good government was rewarded further by his election in 1882 to the New York governorship. In 1884 a national recognition of his merit swept him into the Democratic nomination and the nation's highest office. In 1886 he became the first President to be married in the White House. His bride was Miss Frances Folsom. Cleveland's strength within the party gained for him in 1888 the Democratic re-nomination, but the Republicans won the election. The Democrats chose him again in 1892, many independent voters came to his support, and he won easily. No compromiser, he frequently incurred the ill will of those who opposed his policies; but his honesty and unwavering courage were ably applied.

Benjamin Harrison (1833-1901)Term 1889-1893, TWENTY-THIRD PRESIDENT

Benjamin was the second Harrison to become President. His grandfather, William Henry Harrison, was ninth President of the United States, and his great-grandfather, Benjamin Harrison, was a governor of Virginia. His father, John Scott Harrison, was a member of the Congress for four years. Benjamin Harrison was born at North Bend, Ohio, where he attended school until he was fourteen. In 1852 he was graduated from Miami University. The next year he married Miss Caroline Scott, and in 1854 he was admitted to the bar, and settled in Indianapolis, Indiana. When war came, Harrison was active in recruiting the Seventieth Indiana Regiment of Volunteers. He served in the western campaigns; and in 1865 was mustered out a brigadier-general. He was defeated for the governorship of Indiana in 1876. He became United States Senator in 1881, but failed of re-election by the legislature. The Republicans, searching for a candidate with good political traditions, preferably from the Middle West, found Harrison to be the right man, and he defeated Cleveland in the election of 1888. Benjamin Harrison was the fourth general to become President since 1868.

William McKinley (1843-1901)Term 1897-1901, TWENTY-FIFTH PRESIDENT

William McKinley was the third President to be assassinated. Shot by an anarchist, Leon Czolgosz, September 6, 1901, at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, New York, he died eight days later. The McKinley family lived at Niles, Ohio, when William was born. At seventeen he entered Allegheny College at Meadville, Pennsylvania. Later he taught school, then enlisted in the Twenty-third Ohio Volunteers. In four years of war he rose to the rank of major and was cited for gallantry by President Lincoln. On his return from the war, he completed a law course, married Miss Ida Saxton, and settled in Canton, Ohio, to practice his profession. As the prosecuting attorney of Stark County in 1869, he began a long and honorable career in the public service. From 1876 until 1891 he served in the national House of Representatives; then he was twice elected governor of Ohio. McKinley's staunch Republican record, as well as his support of a high tariff and of the gold standard, won popularity for him among the Republicans. He was nominated and elected President in the campaign of 1896. His administration was distinguished by victory in the Spanish-American War, annexation of Hawaii, and acquisition of the Philippines. In 1900 McKinley was elected to a second term.

Theodore Roosevelt (1858-1919)Term 1901-1909, TWENTY-SIXTH PRESIDENT

Theodore Roosevelt was born in New York City, where his ancestors, of Dutch origin, had lived since 1644. During his childhood Theodore was afflicted with asthma and near sightedness. By unusual tenacity of purpose and effort, he overcame his physical handicaps, and at eighteen entered Harvard University, graduating in 1880. In 1882 he turned to politics, and with Republican party aid, he was elected to the New York legislature. Two years later he suddenly lost both his mother and his young wife. His health was not equal to this double tragedy, and he sought the curative qualities of a Dakota ranch. Returning to New York in 1886, he again threw his energy into politics and served as civil service commissioner and police commissioner of New York City. When the Spanish War came, he was the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, a post he resigned to organize the 1st U. S. Cavalry (Roosevelt's Rough Riders). In 1898 he was elected governor of New York; in 1900 popular approval of his attacks upon unfair practices increased his political strength and brought him the vice-presidency; in 1901 McKinley's assassination made him President; and in 1904 he was elected President. His term was noted for "trust busting," vigorous foreign policy, and for the Panama Canal Project. In 1912 he ran for President on the Progressive ticket, but was defeated.

William Howard Taft (1857-1930)Term 1909-1913, TWENTY-SEVENTH PRESIDENT

Nine years as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and four years as Chief Executive of the United States made William Howard Taft the only American who has been chief of both judicial and executive branches of the national government. His father, a Superior Court judge, a Secretary of War, and an Attorney-General, set a pattern which his son exceeded. William became a judge of the Superior Court in Cincinnati (his native city), a United States Solicitor-General for President Harrison, and a Secretary of War for President Theodore Roosevelt. Taft was also a Federal Circuit judge and a Professor of Law in Yale University. In 1900 he was appointed Civil Governor of the Philippines and in 1906 took temporary charge of affairs in Cuba. In 1908 he was elected President, but the famous Republican split spelled defeat for him in 1912. Though Taft's administration was a stormy one, he was personally well-liked. He was notably successful as a lawyer, jurist, and public administrator. The postal savings bank and the parcel post system were created in his term; and the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Amendments were passed by the Congress. He was well educated, graduating from Yale University with high honors in 1878 and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1880. In 1886 he married Miss Helen Herron, a daughter of Judge John W. Herron, the law partner of Rutherford B. Hayes.

Term 1913-1921, TWENTY-EIGHTH PRESIDENT

Staunton, Virginia, was the birthplace of Thomas Woodrow Wilson, the eighth Virginian to become President. Young Wilson's early schooling was irregular, but a cultured home formed his character with wisdom and refinement. He was graduated from Princeton in 1879; and two years later he received a law degree at the University of Virginia. A zest for learning and for teaching led him into further study at Johns Hopkins University. Teaching positions at Bryn Mawr College and at Wesleyan and Princeton Universities followed. In 1902 he was chosen president of Princeton and served until 1910. From 1911 to 1913 he was governor of New Jersey. The Democrats, looking for a candidate of liberal views, selected Wilson as their leader in the 1912 campaign and the Taft-Roosevelt feud insured a Democratic victory. In Wilson's first term important legislation affected banking, trusts, tariff, labor, and income taxation. Wilson's personal strength and his sincere attempts to avert war won his re-election in 1916. Despite Wilson's efforts the inevitable war came, and he was compelled to give leadership for the great task of victory. As a world leader his fourteen points formed a basis for peace, and he insisted upon the acceptance of the League of Nations, which the United States, alone of the great nations, rejected. Three years after his retirement from the White House, Wilson died—a broken and disappointed man.

Warren Gamaliel Harding (1865-1923)

Term 1921-1923, TWENTY-NINTH PRESIDENT

Warren Harding, the seventh President from Ohio, was born on a farm near the village of Corsica. As a boy he learned the printer's trade in a small shop at Caledonia, Ohio. For a time young Warren attended Ohio Central College, but a newspaper job at Marion lured him away from school and into a lifetime of newspaper work. Failing, by his Republican activities, to please his Democratic employer, Harding gained independence by purchasing the Marion Star, an enterprise which became a major success. From 1900 to 1904 he served in the Ohio State Senate, but he was defeated for the governorship in 1910. Ohio sent him to the United States Senate in 1915. The Republicans in 1920 were deadlocked over presidential candidates until some ardent Ohioans, supported by a small bloc of Senators and a few party leaders, manipulated a triumph for Warren Harding. The chief campaign issue was the acceptance of the League of Nations, but those who opposed it, or wished reservations, won out. Harding's distinguished appearance, genial nature, and political experience forecast a normal administration; but instead came such things as the "Teapot Dome" affair and the President's tragic death. Two unworthy Cabinet members were the chief figures in the oil scandal.

Calvin Coolidge (1872-1933)

Term 1923-1929, THIRTIETH PRESIDENT

The news of Harding's death came to Calvin Coolidge in the little farmhouse at Plymouth, Vermont, where he was born. His father, a local justice, administered the oath of office to the new President by the light of a kerosene lamp. After a boyhood combining farm life with good schooling, Calvin entered Amherst College. He was graduated with honors in 1895. On leaving college, he began to read law in Northampton, Massachusetts, and two years later he was admitted to practice. In 1905 he married Grace A. Goodhue, who was to become one of the best liked of the White House hostesses. Coolidge served Massachusetts in both houses of the legislature and then became governor in 1919. The vigorous words and effective actions which Coolidge as governor applied to the Boston police strike rang favorably throughout the country. He was re-elected governor by a large majority; and he was at once proposed for the presidency, which he was to gain later by way of the vice-presidency. Coolidge brought native forthrightness, sparse utterance, and a thrifty economy to the White House. Drastic reduction of expenditures followed in all departments of the government. With rare political courage he vetoed a soldiers' bonus bill. Elected in his own right, in 1924, Coolidge declined renomination in 1927.

Term 1929-1933, THIRTY-FIRST PRESIDENT

At nine years of age Herbert Hoover was left an orphan in his native village of West Branch, Iowa. Herbert went to live with his Quaker uncle in Oregon. He worked at various jobs, attended night school, gained admission to Leland Stanford University, where he studied geology and mining. After several years of hard experience Hoover became chief engineer for a mining company in Australia. Then he was director-general of mines for the Chinese government, and soon thereafter he filled assignments the world over as a mining expert. When World War I began, Hoover was made chairman of the American Relief Commission in Belgium. In 1917 he was appointed Food Administrator for the United States. After the Armistice he became head of the European Economic Council and gave several years to the relief of distressed peoples. In 1921 when Hoover accepted the Secretary of Commerce post, he was probably the most favorably known American throughout the world. The American public continued to think well of him, electing him President in 1928. His term started smoothly, but was soon overwhelmed by world wide panic. Unreasonable though it might be, his administration was blamed for the disaster and he was therefore defeated in 1932.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1882-1945)

Term 1933-1945, THIRTY-SECOND PRESIDENT

Franklin D. Roosevelt, a fifth cousin of Theodore Roosevelt, was born at Hyde Park, New York. Privately tutored until fourteen, he prepared for college at Groton Academy. In 1904 he was graduated from Harvard and then attended Columbia University Law School, during which time he married Anna Eleanor Roosevelt. He was already interested in politics, and in 1910 was elected to the state senate on the Democratic ticket. Roosevelt was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1913, serving until 1920, resigning to accept the nomination for Vice-President. Shortly after the Democratic defeat, he was stricken with infantile paralysis; but persistent treatment plus heroic courage permitted him to return to political activity. He carried on to be elected governor of New York for two terms, a record which brought him the presidential nomination in the depression year of 1932. New social legislation followed. Roosevelt was renominated and re-elected in 1936; in 1940 (the first third term); and in 1944. Long threatening war broke on December 7, 1941. Roosevelt met global war's demands by calling for overwhelming production at home and by participating in conferences in distant places with the leaders of allied countries. Roosevelt died suddenly, April, 12, 1945.

Harry S. Truman (1884-)

Term 1945-1953, THIRTY-THIRD PRESIDENT

Harry S. Truman was the seventh Vice-President to receive the presidential mantle by the constitutional provision of immediate succession. He accepted the heavy obligations of the presidency with courage and with resolution to complete successfully the plans already made for Allied victory. Before his election to the vice-presidency, Truman was, for ten years, a member of the United States Senate. He won commendation for his work as the chairman of a Senate committee on defense expenditures. Harry Truman—the middle initial is an alphabetical adornment—spent his early life on a farm near his birthplace, Lamar, Missouri. He combined farming with schooling, including music lessons, and was graduated from the Independence, Missouri, High School. He applied for admission to West Point, but was rejected because of faulty vision. He held jobs as drugstore clerk, railroad timekeeper, bank clerk, and haberdasher. Entering World War I as a private, he became captain of a battery of field artillery and saw action in the famous battles of St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne. Truman, elected president in 1948, had to deal with the problems of postwar recovery, of the "Cold War," and of rearmament and the economic dislocations caused by it. He led opposition to the spread of communism in Europe with the Marshall Plan and in Asia with the signing in 1951 of the Pacific Pact and the Japanese Peace Treaty. He declined to be a candidate in 1952.

Dwight David Eisenhower (1890-)

Term 1953-1961, THIRTY-FOURTH PRESIDENT

The second graduate of West Point to become President, Dwight David Eisenhower was born in Denison, Tex. He was graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1915 and the following year married Mamie Geneva Doud. He was a member of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's staff, 1933-39. Having advanced rapidly in rank prior to U.S. entry in World War II he was supreme commander of the Allied forces in the North Africa invasion of 1942. As supreme commander of the Allied Expeditionary Forces, he directed the landing on the Normandy beaches. In December, 1944, he was made General of the Army, the highest military rank. He served as commander of the U.S. Occupation Forces in Germany. After serving as Chief of Staff, 1945-48, he retired from military service to become president of Columbia University. In 1950 he accepted a new post as supreme commander of NATO forces, but soon resigned to become the Republican presidential candidate in 1952. He was elected President the same year. Seeking re-election in 1956, the President campaigned on a platform of continued "Peace and Prosperity," and won a large majority of the popular vote and an overwhelming majority in the electoral college. During his second term, 1961, Eisenhower was the oldest—70 years 3 months—U.S. President in history.

Term 1961-1963, THIRTY-FIFTH PRESIDENT

John Fitzgerald Kennedy, the second-youngest man to become President, was born in Brookline, Mass. He graduated cum laude from Harvard in 1940, and the following year enlisted in the U.S. Navy, and served with distinction throughout World War II. Entering politics in 1946 after a brief but highly successful career in journalism, he was elected on the Democratic ticket from the Eleventh District of Massachusetts to the House of Representatives; re-election followed in 1948 and 1950. In 1952, after a vigorous campaign, he was elected senator from Massachusetts, defeating the incumbent Republican, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., whom Kennedy was again to oppose and defeat in the 1960 presidential election, in which Lodge was Richard Nixon's Republican vice-presidential running mate. The year 1956 saw the publication of Kennedy's best-selling, Pulitzer prize-winning Profiles in Courage; it also saw the youthful Massachusetts senator capture the political limelight by nearly winning the Democratic vice-presidential nomination. In 1958, after being re-elected senator, he began an intensive drive to secure his party's nomination for President in the 1960 election. At the Democratic National Convention in July, 1960, he was the overwhelming choice of the assembled delegates, who gave him the nomination on the first ballot. He was elected President the following November. On Nov. 22, 1963, he was assassinated.

Term 1963- , THIRTY-SIXTH PRESIDENT

Lyndon Baines Johnson was born near Stonewall, Tex. Supporting himself at Southwest Texas State Teachers College by doing janitorial work, he was graduated with a B.S. in 1930. From 1932 to 1935 he served as secretary to Representative Richard M. Kleberg; in 1934 he married Claudia Taylor. After a year in law school and a year as state director of the National Youth Administration of Texas, he was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives, where he served five terms interrupted only by a tour of duty with the U.S. Navy in World War II. Elected to the U.S. Senate in 1943, he became in 1953 the youngest Senate party leader in U.S. history. As Vice-President in the Kennedy administration, he was an important governmental representative abroad. Among his other major responsibilities was the chairmanship of the National Aeronautics and Space Council. On Nov. 22, 1963, after President Kennedy's assassination, Johnson was sworn in as President on the presidential plane at Dallas, Tex. He was elected to the office of President in 1964.

DICTIONARY OF SYNONYMS AND ANTONYMS

A Treasury of Words of Similar and Contrasted Meaning

THOUGHTS are as many-colored and swift-changing as the sunset. They soar up into new realms. They are as endless and various as life itself. Words, by contrast, are pedestrian and limited in number; they plod along in pursuit. Yet if ideas are to be expressed and communicated to others, the right words must be found, the words whose meanings are most suitable. As an aid in this search a dictionary of synonyms and antonyms is of great value. The meanings of synonyms are similar but not identical. Consider the nice shades of meaning presented by the synonyms of DELIGHT—enjoyment, pleasure, happiness, transport, ecstasy, gladness, rapture, bliss; ECSTASY carries an overtone of excitement; BLISS suggests tranquil, perfect contentment; RAPTURE lies somewhere between; TRANSPORT suggests a joy so great as to lift a person out of himself; GLADNESS sounds a more social, hearty, human note; PLEASURE describes the qualities of a simple sensation; and so so. No two words are identical in thought-content; if they were, there would be no need for two. The writer cannot pull one out of a sentence and push in another, like a mason laying bricks of like size, weight, and color. The writer instead must select with care. Usually this selection comes naturally, but when it does not, the writer must search for the correct word—the right word used in the right place and at the right moment to render a new thought imperishable. This dictionary is a simple, effective means for locating these elusive words.

CONCISE TREASURY OF POPULAR QUOTATIONS

Selections from the writings of the foremost authors, poets, and philosophers of all time

Compiled by Gertrude Zimmerman

*He ranged his tropes and preached up patience,
Backed his opinions with quotations.*

MATTHEW PRIOR,
Paulo Purganti and His Wife

Ability

No one knows what it is that he can do till he tries.

PUBLILIUS SYRUS

Natural abilities are like natural plants; they need pruning by study.

FRANCIS BACON. Essays

Every person is responsible for only the good within his abilities, and for no more, and no one can tell whose sphere is the largest.

GAIL HAMILTON,
Country Living and Country Thinking

They can because they think they can.

VERGIL

And all may do what has by man been done.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

The winds and waves are always on the side of the ablest navigators.

EDWARD GIBBON,
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire

Absence

Absence makes the heart grow fonder.

THOMAS HAYNES BAYLY, Isle of Beauty

It so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lacked and lost,
Why, then, we reckon the value.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado about Nothing

Say, is not absence death to those who love?

ALEXANDER POPE, Autumn

Abuse

Abuse, if you slight it, will gradually die away; but if you show yourself irritated you will be thought to have deserved it.

TACITUS

Accomplishment (See also Deeds)

Something attempted, something done,
Has earned a night's repose.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Village Blacksmith

Action (See also Deeds)

Let us do or die.

ROBERT BURNS, Bannockburn

Deeds let escape are never to be done.

ROBERT BROWNING, Sordello

Actions are our epochs.

LORD BYRON, Manfred

Action is transitory—a step, a blow—
The motion of a muscle—this way or that—
'Tis done; and in the after-vacancy
We wonder at ourselves like men betrayed.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH,
The White Doe of Rylstone

The keen spirit
Seizes the prompt occasion, makes the thought
Start into instant action, and at once
Plans and performs, resolves and executes!

HANNAH MORE, Daniel

Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever;
Do noble things, not dream them, all day long.

CHARLES KINGSLEY, A Farewell

Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Views from thy hand no worthy action done.

AUTHOR UNKNOWN. FROM STANIFORD'S
Art of Reading

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
A Psalm of Life

The all of things is an infinite conjugation of the verb to do.

THOMAS CARLYLE, The French Revolution

Better to reign in hell than serve in heaven.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust.

JAMES SHIRLEY,
Contention of Ajax and Ulysses

Actions of the last age are like almanacs of the last year.

SIR JOHN DENHAM, The Sophy

In every deed of mischief he had a heart to resolve, a head to contrive, and a hand to execute.

EDWARD GIBBON,
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire

Actions speak louder than words.

Proverb

Handsome is as handsome does.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH,
The Vicar of Wakefield

Admiration

Fools admire, but men of sense approve.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

A fool always finds a greater fool to admire him.

NICHOLAS BOILEAU

Advancement (See also Ambition)

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Measure for Measure

Adversity

Great things thro' greatest hazards are achiev'd,
And then they shine.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER,
Loyal Subject

Of all the horrid, hideous notes of woe,
Sadder than low-songs on the midnight blast,
Is that portentous phrase, "I told you so."

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Who has not known ill fortune, never knew
Himself, or his own virtue.

MALLET AND THOMSON, Alfred

We bleed, we tremble, we forget, we smile;
The mind turns fool before the cheek is dry.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Rainy Day

The greatest works of admiration,
And all the fair examples of renown,
Out of distress and misery are grown.

SAMUEL DANIEL, Earl of Southampton

Advice

One gives nothing so liberally as advice.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

We ask advice, but we mean approbation.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

The worst men give oft the best advice.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

Let him be so,
For counsel still is folly's deadly foe.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, London Prodigal

Write down the advice of him who loves you, though you like it not at present.

Proverb

I pray thee cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado about Nothing

Aging (See also Old Age; Middle Age; Youth)

Old man, forswear that dogged rumba
Go home and yield to Christian slumba.

MARGARET FISHBACK, *Time for a Quick One*¹

Every man desires to live long, but no man would be old.

JONATHAN SWIFT,
Thoughts on Various Subjects

In youth, what disappointments of our own making: in age, what disappointments from the nature of things.

EDWARD YOUNG,
True Estimate of Human Life

Like our shadows,
Our wishes lengthen as our sun declines.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

¹Copyright 1940, by Margaret Fishback. Reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Brace and Company, Inc.

Oh, sir! I must not tell my age.

They say women and music should never be dated.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH,
She Stoops to Conquer

In youth we run into difficulties, in old age, difficulties run into us.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Our youth we can have but today,
We may always find time to grow old.

BISHOP BERKELEY,
Can Love Be Controlled by Advice?

Youth is a blunder, manhood a struggle; old age a regret.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Coningsby

Young men soon give and soon forget affronts;
Old age is slow in both.

JOSEPH ADDISON, Cato

Agreeability

"My idea of an agreeable person," said Hugo Bohun, "is a person who agrees with me."

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Lothair

Amazement

And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew,
That one small head could carry all he knew.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village

Ambition (See also Advancement; Aspiration)

'T is a common proof,
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar

Ambition has but one reward for all:
A little power, a little transient fame,
A grave to rest in, and a fading name.

WILLIAM WINTER, Queen's Domain

Oh, sons of earth! Attempt ye still to rise
By mountains pil'd on mountains to the skies?
Heaven still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
And buries madmen in the heaps they raise.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

And the final event to himself (Mr. Burke) has been, that, as he rose like a rocket, he fell like the stick.

THOMAS PAINE, Letter to the Addressers

I hate the man who builds his name
On ruins of another's fame.

JOHN GAY, Fables

Fain would I climb, but that I fear to fall.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH,
Historie of the World

Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves that we are underlings.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar

He who surpasses or subdues mankind
Must look down on the hate of those below.

LORD BYRON, Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Reign, and keep life in this our deep desire—
Our only greatness is that we aspire.

JEAN INGELOW, A Snow Mountain

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;
And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Richard III

Ambition is an idol on whose wings
Great minds are carry'd only to extreme;
To be sublimely great, or to be nothing.

THOMAS SOUTHERNE, The Loyal Brother

Look not too high, lest a chip fall in your eye.

Proverb

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour:
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

THOMAS GRAY,

Elegy in a Country Churchyard

Americanism

To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.

GEORGE WASHINGTON,
Speech to both Houses of Congress

We join ourselves to no party that does not carry the flag, and keep step to the music of the Union.

RUFUS CHOATE,
Letter to Whig Convention

Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable!

DANIEL WEBSTER,
Speech on Foote's Resolution

The people's government, made for the people, made by the people, and answerable to the people.

DANIEL WEBSTER,
Second Speech on Foote's Resolution

Let our object be our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country.

DANIEL WEBSTER,
Address on Laying of the Cornerstone of the Bunker Hill Monument

Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, I give my hand and my heart to this vote.

DANIEL WEBSTER,
Eulogy on Adams and Jefferson

I shall on all subjects have a policy to recommend,
but none to enforce against the will of the people.

ULYSSES S. GRANT,
First Inaugural Address

Independence now and Independence forever.

DANIEL WEBSTER,
Eulogy on Adams and Jefferson

The world must be made safe for democracy.

WOODROW WILSON,
War Address to Congress

And ne'er shall the sons of Columbia be slaves, While the earth bears a plant, or the sea rolls its waves.

ROBERT TREAT PAINE,
Adams and Liberty

Then join hand in hand, brave Americans all;
By uniting we stand, by dividing we fall.

JOHN DICKINSON,
The Liberty Song

Let independence be our boast,
Ever mindful what it cost;
Ever grateful for the prize,
Let its altar reach the skies!

JOSEPH HOPKINSON,
Hail, Columbia

Our country! in her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong!

STEPHEN DECATUR, Toast

There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anywhere, any time.

CALVIN COOLIDGE,
Letter to Samuel Gompers

In the field of world policy, I would dedicate this nation to the policy of the good neighbor.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
First Inaugural Address

This generation of Americans has a rendezvous with destiny.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
Speech Accepting Renomination

We aim at the assurance of a rounded and permanent national life. We do not distrust the future of essential democracy.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
First Inaugural Address

The test of our progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have much;
it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
Second Inaugural Address

We must be the great arsenal of democracy.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
Fireside Chat, Dec. 29, 1940

We do not see faith, hope and charity as unattainable ideals, but we use them as stout supports of a nation fighting the fight for freedom in a modern civilization.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
Renomination Speech

This hand, to tyrants ever sworn the foe,
For Freedom only deals the deadly blow;
Then sheathes in calm repose the vengeful blade,
For gentle peace in Freedom's hallowed shade.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS

I believe this government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
Speech, Republican State Convention, 1858

Speak softly and carry a big stick: you will go far.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Address

Blandishments will not fascinate us, nor will threats of a "halter" intimidate. For, under God, we are determined that, wheresoever, whensoever, or howsoever we shall be called to make our exit, we will die free men.

JOSIAH QUINCY,
Observations on the Boston Port Bill

We have met the enemy, and they are ours.

OLIVER H. PERRY,
Dispatch to General Harrison

Freedom of religion; freedom of the press; freedom of person under the protection of the habeas corpus; and trial by juries impartially selected,
—these principles form the bright constellation which has gone before us, and guided our steps through an age of revolution and reformation.

THOMAS JEFFERSON,
First Inaugural Address

It is not best to swap horses when crossing a stream.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
upon his renomination.

With malice toward none, with charity for all,
with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
Second Inaugural Address

That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
Speech at Gettysburg

To the memory of the Man, first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

COL. HENRY LEE, Eulogy on Washington

We mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honour.

THOMAS JEFFERSON,
Declaration of Independence

The God who gave us life, gave us liberty at the same time.

THOMAS JEFFERSON,
Summary View of the Rights of British America

We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights; that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness.

THOMAS JEFFERSON,
Declaration of Independence

Our federal Union, it must be preserved.

ANDREW JACKSON, Toast

Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but, as for me, give me liberty, or give me death!

PATRICK HENRY, Speech

He serves his party best who serves the country best.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES,
Inaugural Address

I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country.

NATHAN HALE,
[Last words before being executed.]

God reigns, and the Government at Washington lives.

JAMES A. GARFIELD

They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Historical Review of Pennsylvania

We must all hang together, else we shall all hang separately.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
[Remark during signing of Declaration of Independence.]

Nothing is certain but death and taxes.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Letter to Leroy

The financial honor of this government is of too vast importance, is entirely too sacred to be the football of party politics.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY

I am for America because America is for the common people.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY

We go to war only to make peace. We never went to war with any other design. We carry the national conscience wherever we go.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY

God and man have linked the nations together.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY

No material greatness, no wealth, no accumulation of splendor, is to be compared with those humble and homely virtues which have generally characterized our American homes.

BENJAMIN HARRISON

We want no more land. We do want to improve what we have, and want to see our neighbors improve and grow so strong that the design of any other country could not endanger them.

ULYSSES S. GRANT

Performance should be made square with promise.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

The country's honor must be upheld at home and abroad.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

What is wanted is not more law, but a better public opinion.

JAMES G. BLAINE

He mocks the people who proposes that the government shall protect the rich that they in turn may care for the laboring poor.

GROVER CLEVELAND

An American citizen could not be a good citizen who did not have hope in his heart.

GROVER CLEVELAND

Public officers are the servants and agents of the people. Subordinates in public place should be selected and retained for their efficiency, and not because they may be used to accomplish partisan ends.

GROVER CLEVELAND

The declaration that our people are hostile to a government made by ourselves and for themselves, and conducted by themselves, is an insult.

JOHN ADAMS, Address

Ancestry

Our ancestors are very good kind of folks; but they are the last people I should choose to have a visiting acquaintance with.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN, The Rivals

Anger

Never forget what a man says to you when he is angry.

HENRY WARD BEECHER, Life Thoughts

Anger is like

A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII

Wise anger is like fire from a flint: there is great ado to get it out; and when it does come, it is out again immediately.

MATTHEW HENRY

When anger rushes, unrestrain'd to action,
Like a hot steed, it stumbles in its way:
The man of thought strikes deepest, and strikes safest.

RICHARD SAVAGE, Sir Thomas Overbury

A man's disposition is never well known till he be crossed.

FRANCIS BACON, Advancement of Learning

Well, no offense:
Thar ain't no sense
In gittin' riled.

FRANCIS BRET HART, Jim

Anger is short madness.

HORACE

He who conquers his wrath overcomes his greatest enemy.

PUBLILIUS SYRUS

Delay is the best remedy for anger.

SENECA, De Ira

Anger, when it is long in coming, is the stronger when it comes, and the longer felt.

FRANCIS QUARLES

The elephant is never won with Anger,
Nor must that man who would reclaim a lion
Take him by the teeth.

EARL OF ROCHESTER, Valentinian

Angling

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado about Nothing

Angling is somewhat like Poetry, men are to be born so.

IZAACK WALTON, The Compleat Angler

Anticipation

All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

Expectation in a weak mind makes an evil greater and a good, less; but in a resolved mind it digests an evil before it comes; and makes a future good, long before present. I will expect the worst, because it may come: the best, because I know it will come.

BISHOP JOSEPH HALL,
Meditations and Vows

Nothing is so good as it seems beforehand.

GEORGE ELIOT, Silas Marner

To swallow gudgeons ere they're catched,
And count their chickens ere they're hatched.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

Antiquity

Nothing can be preserved that is not good.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
In Praise of Books

Apology

Apologies only account for that which they do not alter.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI,
Speech in the House of Commons

Appearance

You can't judge a horse by the harness.

Proverb

Great men are seldom over-scrupulous in the arrangement of their attire.

CHARLES DICKENS, Pickwick Papers

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in fancy;
rich, not gaudy:
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

All that glisters is not gold,
Gilded tombs do worms infold.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

By outward show let's not be cheated;
An ass should like an ass be treated.

JOHN GAY, Fables

And many a withering thought lies hid, not lost,
In smiles that least befit who wears them most.

LORD BYRON, Corsair

Things are seldom what they seem;
Skim milk masquerades as cream.

SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK GILBERT,
H. M. S. Pinafore

The Devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

All is not gold that glitters.

Proverb

Fine feathers, they say, make fine birds.

ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, The Padlock

A goodly apple rotten at the heart;
O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

Argument

Be calm in arguing; for fierceness makes Error a fault, and truth discourtesy.

SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE

When much dispute has past,
We find our tenets just the same as last.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

Who, too deep for his hearers, still went on refining.

And thought of convincing while they thought of dining.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, Retaliation

Art

To me more dear, congenial to my heart,
One native charm, than all the gloss of art.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village

Art is not imitation but illusion.

CHARLES READE, Christie Johnstone

Art is the child of Nature.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, Keramos

Art may make a suit of clothes; but Nature must produce a man.

DAVID HUME, Essays

For Art may err, but Nature cannot miss.

JOHN DRYDEN, The Cock and the Fox

The course of Nature is the art of God.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Aspiration (See also Ambition)

Alas! we make
A ladder of our thoughts, where angels step,
But sleep ourselves at the foot: our high resolves
Look down upon our slumbering acts.

LETITIA ELIZABETH LANDON,
A History of the Lyre

Screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

Too low they build who build beneath the stars.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Hitch your wagon to a star.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Society and Solitude

To be, or not to be: that is the question.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Assurance (See also Confidence)

Assurance is two-thirds of success.

Proverb

Authors

Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old:
It is the rust we value, not the gold.

ALEXANDER POPE, Imitation of Horace

The author who speaks about his own books is almost as bad as a mother who talks about her own children.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI,
Speech at Glasgow

Autumn

The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows brown and sere.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT,
Death of the Flowers

And in his hand a sickle he did holde,
To reape the ripened fruit the which the earth had yold.

EDMUND SPENSER, Faerie Queene

The year growing ancient,
Not yet on summer's death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Winter's Tale

Wild is the music of autumnal winds
Amongst the faded woods.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

Thrice happy time,
Best portion of the various year, in which Nature rejoiceth, smiling on her works,
Lovely, to full perception wrought.

JOHN PHILIPS, Cyder

Awareness

To know ourselves diseased is half our cure.

ALEXANDER POPE

Bad News

For evil news rides post, while good news baits.

JOHN MILTON, Samson Agonistes

Ill news comes apace.

Proverb

Beauty

The flowers anew returning seasons bring,
But beauty faded has no second spring.

AMBROSE PHILLIPS, Pastoral

Beauty from order springs.

WILLIAM KING, The Art of Cookery

Beauty's of a fading nature—
Has a season and is gone!

ROBERT BURNS,

Will Ye Go and Marry Katie?

Beauty is but skin deep.

Proverb

The saying that beauty is but skin deep is but a skin-deep saying.

HERBERT SPENCER, Essays

A thing of beauty is a joy forever;
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness.

JOHN KEATS, Endymion

Beauty is a very handy thing to have, especially for a woman who ain't handsome.

JOSEPH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

If eyes were made for seeing,
Then Beauty is its own excuse for being.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, The Rhodora

In beauty faults conspicuous grow;
The smallest speck is seen on snow.

JOHN GAY, Fables

'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Beauty is but a flower
Which wrinkles will devour.

THOMAS NASH,

Summer's Last Will and Testament

Believing

A man lives by believing something; not by debating and arguing about many things.

THOMAS CARLYLE

Man prefers to believe what he prefers to be true.

FRANCIS BACON, Aphorisms

What we ardently wish, we believe.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Bitterness

But hushed be every thought that springs
From out the bitterness of things.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH, Elegiac Stanzas

Blushing

The man that blushes is not quite a brute.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Boasting

Would you know the qualities in which a man is wanting? Examine those of which he boasts.

SÉGUR, Poems

The honor is overpaid,
When he that did the act is commentator.

JAMES SHIRLEY

The empty vessel makes the greatest sound.

Proverb

Books

Who kills a man, kills a reasonable creature,
God's image; but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself.

JOHN MILTON, Areopagitica

Books, like friends, should be few and well chosen.

SAMUEL PATERSON, Joineriana

God be thanked for books. They are the voices of the distant and the dead, and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING,
Self-Culture

Books are the best things, well used; abused, among the worst.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested.

FRANCIS BACON, Essay on Studies

A good book is the precious lifeblood of a master-spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life.

JOHN MILTON, Areopagitica

Bores

Again I hear the creaking step!—
He's rapping at the door!—
Too well I know the boding sound
That ushers in a bore.

JOHN GODFREY SAXE, My Familiar

We always get bored with those whom we bore.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

Borrowing

A man in debt is so far a slave.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

The human species, according to the best theory
I can form of it, is composed of two distinct races, the men who borrow and the men who lend.

CHARLES LAMB, Two Races

Let us all be happy and live within our means, even if we have to borrow the money to do it with.

ARTEMUS WARD, Natural History

Neither a borrower nor a lender be:

For loan oft loses both itself and friend;

And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Creditors have better memories than debtors.

Proverb

When debtors once have borrowed all we have to lend, they are very apt to grow shy of their creditors' company.

SIR JOHN VANBRUGH,
The Provoked Wife

Bravado

His bark is worse than his bite.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum

The robbed that smiles steals something from the thief.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Othello

The Schoolboy, with his satchel in his hand,
Whistling aloud to bear his courage up.

ROBERT BLAIR, The Grave

Bravery (See also Courage)

None but the brave deserves the fair.

JOHN DRYDEN, Alexander's Feast

Breeding

A man's own good breeding is his best security against other people's ill manners.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letters to His Son

Brevity

Brevity is the soul of wit.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Carelessness

Many little leaks may sink a ship.

THOMAS FULLER,
Holy and Profane States

Cause and Effect

Shallow men believe in luck, believe in circumstances. Strong men believe in cause and effect.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Conduct of Life

Caution

Great estates may venture more,
But little boats should keep near shore.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

They that fear the adder's sting, will not come near his hissing.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Widow's Tears

Slow and steady wins the race.

DAVID LLOYD, Fables

Caution is the parent of safety.

Proverb

Celebrity

Celebrity is the chastisement of merit and the punishment of talent.

SÉBASTIEN R. N. CHAMFORT

Celebrity is the advantage of being known to people whom we don't know, and who don't know us.

SÉBASTIEN R. N. CHAMFORT

Certainty

In this world, nothing is certain but death and taxes.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Letter

There is nothing certain in man's life but that he must lose it.

OWEN MEREDITH, Clytemnestra

The only thing that is certain is that nothing is certain.

PLINY THE ELDER,
Historia Naturalis

Chance

Chance is the providence of adventurers.

NAPOLÉON BONAPARTE

A fool must now and then be right by chance.

WILLIAM COWPER, Conversations

Change

A rolling stone gathers no moss.

STEPHEN GOSSON,
Ephemerides of Phialo

Life belongs to the living, and he who lives must be prepared for changes.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

The stone that is rolling can gather no moss;
For master and servant oft changing is loss.

THOMAS TUSSEY,
Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry

Character

Character is simply a habit long continued.

PLUTARCH

I leave my character behind me.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN,
School for Scandal

Character is a reserve force which acts directly by presence and without means.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Character is the result of a system of stereotyped principles.

DAVID HUME

Charity

The best investment I know of is charity: you git your principal back immediately, and draw a dividend every time you think of it.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Charity begins at home, but should not end there.

Proverb

Alas for the rarity of Christian charity
Under the sun!

THOMAS HOOD, Bridge of Sighs

They serve God well
Who serve his creatures.

CAROLINE ELIZABETH NORTON,
Lady of La Garaye

Children

The wise child handles father and mother
By playing one against the other.

OGDEN NASH, *The Face is Familiar*¹

¹Copyright 1931, 1933, 1936, 1938 by Ogden Nash. Reprinted by permission of Little, Brown & Co.

Children know,
Instinctive taught, the friend or foe.
SIR WALTER SCOTT, Lady of the Lake

Then spare the rod, and spoil the child.
SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Lear

Choice

A man is too apt to forget that in this world he cannot have everything. A choice is all that is left him.

H. MATHEWS, Diary of an Invalid

Descend a step in choosing a wife, ascend a step in choosing thy friend.
The Talmud

Christianity (See also Religion)

Christianity is an idea and as such is immortal like every idea.

HEINRICH HEINE,
Religion and Philosophy

Christianity is the root of all democracy, the highest fact in the rights of man.

NOVALIS

Christianity is a religion that can make men good, only if they are good already.

GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH HEGEL

Christmas

At Christmas play and make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year.
THOMAS TUSSEY,
Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry

Circumstances

Circumstances alter cases.
THOMAS CHANDLER HALIBURTON,
The Old Judge

Everyone is as God has made him, and oftentimes a great deal worse.
MIGUEL DE CERVANTES, Don Quixote

Who does the best his circumstance allows,
Does well, acts nobly—angels could no more.
EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Civilization

Civilization is the eternal sacrifice of one generation to the next.
BULWER-LYTTON, Alice

Cleanliness

Cleanliness is near of kin to godliness.
Proverb

Cleanliness is, indeed, next to godliness.
JOHN WESLEY, Sermon on Dress

Common Sense

Common sense is not so common.
VOLTAIRE

Comparison

None but himself can be his parallel.
LOUIS THEOBALD, The Double Falsehood

Leave her, and I will leave comparing thus;
She and comparisons are odious.
JOHN DONNE, Elegie VIII

Complaints

Constant complaints never get pity.
Proverb

They who complain most are most to be complained of.

Compromise

All great alterations in human affairs are produced by compromise.
SYDNEY SMITH, Catholic Question

Throw no gift againe the giver's head;
For better is halfe a lofe than no bread.
JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

Compulsion

Nothing is pleasant
Joined with a must.
ROBERT BRIDGES, Nero

Who overcomes
By force hath overcome but half his foe.
JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

Conceit

Every man thinks his own geese, swans.
Proverb

He's so full of himself that he is quite empty.
Proverb

Conceit may puff a man up, but never prop him up.
JOHN RUSKIN

Concentration

Concentration is the secret of strength in politics, in war, in trade, in short in all the management of human affairs.
RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Confession

An open confession is good for the soul.
Proverb

A fault confessed is half redressed.
Proverb

Confidence

Confidence is a thing that cannot be produced by compulsion.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Speech

Confidence is a plant of slow growth in an aged bosom.

WILLIAM PITT, Speech

For they can conquer who believe they can.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON
Society and Solitude

Conscience

A burthen'd conscience
Will never need a hangman.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER,
Laws of Comedy

Whatever creed be taught or land be trod,
Man's conscience is the oracle of God!

LORD BYRON, The Island

Let his tormentor, Conscience, find him out.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Regained

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

The fond fantastic thing call'd conscience,
Which serves for nothing but to make men cowards.

THOMAS SHADWELL, The Libertine

Conscience, good my lord,
Is but the pulse of reason.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE, Zapolya

Conscience, the bosom-hell of guilty man!

JAMES MONTGOMERY, The Pelican Island

Conscience, in most souls, is like an English sovereign—it reigns, but it does not govern.

WILLIAM HURRELL MALLOCK,
The New Republic

Here, here it lies; a lump of lead by day;
And in my short, distracted, nightly slumbers,
The hag that rides my dreams.

JOHN DRYDEN

There is no future pang
Can deal that justice on the self-condemn'd
He deals on his own soul.

LORD BYRON, Manfred

A guilty conscience needs no accuser.

Proverb

A quiet conscience makes one so serene.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Conscience is the chamber of justice.

ORIGEN

Constancy

When change itself can give no more,
It is easy to be true.

SIR CHARLES SEDLEY,
Reasons for Constancy

Contentment

Show me a thoroughly contented person, and I will show you a useless one.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Contentment consisteth not in adding more fuel, but in taking away some fire.

THOMAS FULLER

Controversy

He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.

EDMUND BURKE,
Reflections on the Revolution in France

Conversation

Silence and modesty are very valuable qualities in conversation.

MICHEL DE MONTAIGNE

Conversation is an art in which a man has all mankind for competitors.

Corporations

They (corporations) cannot commit trespass nor be outlawed, nor excommunicate, for they have no souls.

SIR EDWARD COKE,
Case of Sutton's Hospital

Correction (See also Criticism)

Correction is good administered in time.

Proverb

Corruption

Corruption is like a ball of snow, when once set a-rolling it must increase.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets

Courage (See also Daring)

They also serve who only stand and wait.

JOHN MILTON

'Tis more brave to live than to die.

OWEN MEREDITH, Lucile

True valor lies half way between cowardice and rashness.

MIGUEL DE CERVANTES, Don Quixote

He is not valiant that dares die,

But he that boldly bears calamity.

PHILIP MASSINGER,

The Maid of Honour

A brave man struggling with adversity is a spectacle for the gods.

SENECA

Do have the courage not to adopt another's courage.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,

Society and Solitude

Courage consists not in blindly overlooking danger, but in meeting it with the eyes open.

JEAN PAUL RICHTER

Courtesy

Politeness costs nothing and gains everything.

LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU, Letters

Life is not so short but that there is always room for courtesy.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Social Aims

Good manners never can intrude.

Cowardice

The coward threatens when he is safe.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Faint heart ne'er won fair lady.

MIGUEL DE CERVANTES, Don Quixote

Criticism

People in general will much better bear being told of their vices or crimes than of their little failings or weaknesses.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

Some of their capsules survive among the classic punchlines of all times, especially those typed in acid.

WALTER WINCHELL

Those best can bear reproof who merit praise.

ALEXANDER POPE,

Essay on Criticism

It is much easier to be critical than correct.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech

Culture

Culture is not a substitute for life, but the key to it.

WILLIAM HURRELL MALLOCK,

The New Republic

Curiosity

Curiosity is the kernel of the forbidden fruit.

THOMAS FULLER

Curiosity is lying in wait for every secret.

Concerning Human Understanding

To follow foolish precedents, and wink
With both our eyes, is easier than to think.

WILLIAM COWPER, Tirocinium

Danger

Everything is sweetened by risk.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp

Without danger we cannot get beyond danger.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum

A danger will never be overcome without danger.

PUBLILIUS SYRUS

Danger for danger's sake is senseless.

VICTOR HUGO

When the house of your neighbor is on fire, your own is in danger.

Proverb

Daring (See also Courage)

Who bravely dares must sometimes risk a fall.

TOBIAS SMOLLET, Advice

I dare do all that may become a man;

Who dares do more is none.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

Dare to do something worthy of transportation and imprisonment, if you wish to be somebody.

JUVENAL

Daybreak

The morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest

Death

I have a rendezvous with Death,
At some disputed barricade,
When Spring comes back with rustling shade,
And apple-blossoms fill the air.

ALAN SEEGER,
*I Have a Rendezvous With Death*¹

The dead they sleep, a long, long sleep;
The dead they rest, and their rest is deep;
The dead have peace, but the living weep.
SAMUEL HOFFENSTEIN, *Year In, You're Out*²

I am glad God saw Death and gave Death a Job taking care of all who are tired of living.
CARL SANDBURG, *Junkman*³

If I fear at all, I fear dying—I do not fear death.
SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE, Letters

Death lays his icy hand on kings;
Scepter and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor, crooked scythe and spade.
JAMES SHIRLEY,
Contention of Ajax and Ulysses

Death is, to a certain extent, an impossibility which suddenly becomes a reality.
JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Let no man fear to die; we love to sleep all,
And death is but the sounder sleep.
FRANCIS BEAUMONT,
Humorous Lieutenant

No life that breathes with human breath
Has ever truly longed for death.
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
The Two Voices

Death, kind Nature's signal of retreat.
SAMUEL JOHNSON,
The Vanity of Human Wishes

Death joins us to the great majority.
EDWARD YOUNG, The Revenge

It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Julius Caesar

All that lives must die,
Passing through nature to eternity.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

He that begins to live, begins to die.
FRANCIS QUARLES, Hieroglyph

A man can die but once.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
King Henry IV

Deception

Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive.
SIR WALTER SCOTT, Marmion

If a man deceive me once, shame on him; if twice, shame on me.
Proverb

It is a double pleasure to deceive the deceiver.
Proverb

Deeds (See also Action)

Deeds are the pulse of time.
GEORGE ELIOT, Daniel Deronda

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

The deed is everything; the fame is nothing.
JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Defense

Never make a defense or apology before you be accused.
CHARLES I, Letter to Lord Wentworth

Democracy (See also Americanism)

Democracy means simply the bludgeoning of the people, by the people, for the people.
OSCAR WILDE,
Soul of Man Under Socialism

A democracy is a state in which the government rests directly with the majority of the citizens.
JOHN RUSKIN

Democracy started from men's thinking that if they are equal on any count, they are equal absolutely.
ARISTOTLE, Politics

Dependency

Affairs that depend on many rarely succeed.
FRANCESCO GUICCIARDINI

Depression

All day the darkness and the cold
Upon my heart have lain,
Like shadows on the winter sky,
Like frost upon the pane.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER,
On Receiving an Eagle's Quill

Despair (See also Grief and Sorrow)

Despair is the conclusion of fools.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sibyl

It is a miserable state of mind to have few things to desire, and many things to fear.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays

Destruction

A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
An hour may lay it in the dust.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Difficulties

All things are difficult before they are easy.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia

Difficulties are meant to rouse, not discourage.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING

Dignity

Where boasting ends there dignity begins.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

There is a certain dignity to be kept up in pleasures as well as in business.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letters to His Son

A life both dull and dignified.

SIR WALTER SCOTT, Marmion

Diplomacy

A drop of honey catches more flies than a hog's-head of vinegar.

Proverb

Toward men, and toward God, she maintained a respectful attitude, lightened by the belief that in a crisis she could deal adequately with either of them.

ROBERT NATHAN, *The Road of Ages*¹

Disappointment

Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed.

ALEXANDER POPE, Letter to Gay

Things sweet to taste

Prove in digestion, sour.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Richard II

I never loved a tree or flower,
But 'twas the first to fade away.

THOMAS MOORE, Lalla Rookh

Discipline

He that has learned to obey will know how to command.

SOLON

Discontent

Who with a little can not be content,
Endures an everlasting punishment.

ROBERT HERRICK, Hesperides

What makes us discontented with our condition is the absurdly exaggerated idea we have of the happiness of others.

Proverb

Discontent is the first step in the progress of a man or a nation.

OSCAR WILDE,
A Woman of No Importance

Discretion

Abhor a knave and pity a fool in your heart, but let neither of them unnecessarily see that you do so.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letters to His Son

Discussion

In political discussion heat is in inverse proportion to knowledge.

J. G. C. MINCHIN,
The Growth of Freedom in the Balkan Peninsula

Disgrace

In shame there is no comfort, but to be beyond all bounds of shame.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Arcadia

A man may survive distress, but not disgrace.

Proverb

Disgraces are much like cherries—one draws another.

GEORGE HERBERT,
Jacula Prudentum

Disorder

Disorder makes nothing at all, but unmakes everything.

JOHN STUART BLACKIE

Doubts

If a man will begin with certainties, he shall end in doubts; but if he will be content to begin with doubts, he shall end in certainties.

FRANCIS BACON,
Advancement of Learning

By doubting we come at the truth.

CICERO

Our doubts are traitors
And make us lose the good we oft might win
By fearing to attempt.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Measure for Measure

Dreams

We are such stuff
As dreams are made on; and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest

Drink

Candy is dandy
But liquor is quicker.

OGDEN NASH, *The Face is Familiar*¹

There is nothing which has yet been contrived by man by which so much happiness is produced as by a good tavern or inn.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,
in Boswell's Life of Johnson

Some men are like musical glasses—to produce their finest tones you must keep them wet.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE

Drink not the third glass, which thou canst not tame
When once it is within thee.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church Porch

Drink! for you know not whence you came, nor why:

Drink! for you know not why you go, nor where.

OMAR KHAYYAM, The Rubaiyat

Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Timon of Athens

Sweet fellowship in shame;
One drunkard loves another of the name.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Love's Labour's Lost

Best while you have it use your breath:
There is no drinking after death!

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Rollo

Duty

He gives nothing but worthless gold
Who gives from a sense of duty.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL,
Vision of Sir Launfal

Do the duty that lies nearest thee; which thou knowest to be a duty.

The second duty will already become clearer.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus

I slept, and dreamed that life was Beauty;
I woke, and found that life was Duty.

ELLEN HOOPER, The Dial

You would not think any duty small
If you yourself were great.

GEORGE MACDONALD, Willie's Question

New occasions teach new duties.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL,
The Present Crisis

Earnestness

Earnestness is enthusiasm tempered by reason.

BLAISE PASCAL

Eating

He hath eaten me out of house and home.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry IV

Unquiet meals make ill digestions.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Comedy of Errors

Eavesdropping

Listen at the keyhole, and you'll hear news of yourself.

Proverb

Education

Deep versed in books, and shallow in himself.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Regained

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head.

ALEXANDER POPE,
Essay on Criticism

A smattering of everything and a knowledge of nothing.

CHARLES DICKENS, Sketches by Boz

Better build schoolrooms for the boy,
Than cells and gibbets for the man.

ELIZA COOK,
A Song for the Ragged Schools

'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

Egoism

Every man is of importance to himself.

SAMUEL JOHNSON

Encouragement

Correction does much, but encouragement does more.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Enemies

Man is his own worst enemy.

CICERO

Enjoyment

Enjoy when you can, and endure when you must.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

We're charmed with distant views of happiness,
But near approaches make the prospect less.

THOMAS YALDEN, Against Enjoyment

A man of pleasure is a man of pains.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

A day in such serene enjoyment spent
Were worth an age of splendid discontent!

JAMES MONTGOMERY, Greenland

Enthusiasm

Enthusiasm is the genius of sincerity, and truth accomplishes no victories without it.

BULWER-LYTTON,

The Last Days of Pompeii

Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Circles

It is unfortunate, considering that enthusiasm moves the world, that so few enthusiasts can be trusted to speak the truth.

ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR,

Letter to Mrs. Drew

No wild enthusiast ever yet could rest,
Till half mankind were like himself possess'd.

WILLIAM COWPER,

Progress of Error

Envy

People hate those that make them feel their own inferiority: therefore conceal all your learning carefully.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

How bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes!

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It

Envy is but the smoke of low estate
Ascending still against the fortunate.

LORD BROOKE, Alaham

Envy is a necessary evil; it is a little goad which forces us to do yet better.

VOLTAIRE

Envy is better worth having than pity.

Proverb

For one man who sincerely pities our misfortunes, there are a thousand who sincerely hate our success.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

Fools may our scorn, not envy, raise,
For envy is a kind of praise.

JOHN GAY, Fables

Base envy withers at another's joy
And hates the excellence it cannot reach.

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

Equality

Equality is the sacred law of humanity.

FRIEDRICH SCHILLER

Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

JONATHAN SWIFT, Journal to Stella

Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet,

Till earth and sky stand presently at God's great judgment seat;

But there is neither East nor West, Border nor Breed nor Birth,

When two strong men stand face to face, though they come from the ends of the earth!

RUDYARD KIPLING,

The Ballad of East and West

But our captain counts the image of God, nevertheless his image, cut in ebony as if done in ivory.

THOMAS FULLER, The Good Sea-Captain

Error

There is no anguish like an error of which we feel ashamed.

BULWER-LYTTON, Ernest Maltravers

Honest error is to be pitied, not ridiculed.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,

Letters to His Son

For there is no error so crooked but it hath in it some lines of truth.

MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER,

Proverbial Philosophy of Truth in Things False

Errors like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.

JOHN DRYDEN, All for Love

Evil

Evil is only good perverted.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,

The Golden Legend

But evil is wrought by want of thought,
As well as want of heart.

THOMAS HOOD, The Lady's Dream

A little evil is often necessary for obtaining a great good.

VOLTAIRE, Baron d'Otranto

Exaggeration

Exaggeration is to paint a snake and add legs.

Proverb

Example

Examples would indeed be excellent things were not people so modest that none will set them, and so vain that none will follow them.

JULIUS CHARLES HARE

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

From another's evil qualities a wise man corrects his own.

PUBLILIUS SYRUS

Example is the school of mankind and they will learn at no other.

EDMUND BURKE,
Letter on a Regicide Peace

Excess

A surfeit of the sweetest things,
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Midsummer Night's Dream

Thus each extreme to equal danger tends:
Plenty, as well as want, can sep'rate friends.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Dauides

Enough is as good as a feast: . . . too much of a good thing is good for nothing.

THEODORE HOOK, Danvers

Excuses

A bad excuse is better, they say, than none at all.
STEPHEN GOSSON, The Schoole of Abuse

An excuse uncalled for becomes an obvious accusation.

Law Maxim

Existence

I think, therefore I am.

RENÉ DESCARTES

Experience

Experience is the best of schoolmasters.

Proverb

Sad experience leaves no room for doubt.

ALEXANDER POPE, January and May

Experience makes us able pilots in the waves of fortune.

EDWARD YOUNG,
True Estimate of Human Life

Experience is the best teacher, only the school-fees are heavy.

GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH HEGEL

A burnt child dreads the fire.

Proverb

I had rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
As You Like It

The best of prophets of the future is the past.

LORD BYRON, Letter

The years teach much which the days never know.
RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Experience

For Time will teach thee soon the truth,
There are no birds in last year's nest!

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
It Is Not Always May

He jests at scars that never felt a wound.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Romeo and Juliet

A sadder and a wiser man,
He rose the morrow morn.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,
The Ancient Mariner

By pain men come to greater pains,
And by indignities men come to dignities.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays

It is costly wisdom that is bought by experience.

ROGER ASCHAM, The Schoolmaster

Extravagance

Fond pride of dress is, sure, a very curse;
Ere fancy you consult, consult your purse.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

A fool and his money are soon parted.

Proverb

Extremity

Who love too much, hate in the like extreme.

ALEXANDER POPE,
The Odyssey of Homer

Virtuous and vicious every man must be,
Few in the extreme, but all in the degree.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

Eyes

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine.

BEN JONSON, To Celia

From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They are the ground, the books, the academes,
From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Love's Labour's Lost

Her glance, how wildly beautiful.

LORD BYRON

Those eyes
Soft and capacious as a cloudless sky.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

Her eyes are homes of silent prayer.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, In Memoriam

Face

Was this the face that launch'd a thousand ships,
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE, Faustus

Facts

A fact in our lives is valuable not so far as it is true, but as it is significant.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Facts are stubborn things.

JARED ELLIOT

Failure

I am not now in fortune's power:
He that is down can fall no lower.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

A man of intellect without energy added to it is a failure.

SÉBASTIEN R. N. CHAMFORT

In the lexicon of youth, which fate reserves for a bright manhood, there is no such word as—fail!

BULWER-LYTTON, Richelieu

Fairness

Let the other side also have a hearing.

SENECA

Faith

Our faith comes in moments; our vice is habitual.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, The Over-Soul

Faith builds a bridge from the old world to the next.

EDWARD YOUNG

Faith is a higher faculty than reasoning.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

Faith is the subtle chain
That binds us to the Infinite: the voice
Of a deep life within.

ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH, Faith

Pin not your faith on another's sleeve.

Proverb

The faith that stands on authority is not faith.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, The Over-Soul

O welcome, pure-eyed Faith, white-handed Hope,
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings!

JOHN MILTON, Comus

Call no faith false which e'er has brought

Relief to any laden life,

Cessation from the pain of thought,

Refreshment 'mid the dust of strife.

LEWIS MORRIS, Songs of Two Worlds

Man then, has not invented God;
He has developed Faith,
To meet a God already there.

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY,
*Conversation at Midnight*¹

Fame

Fame is a fickle food
Upon a shifting plate.

EMILY DICKINSON, *The Single Hound*²

One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name.

SIR WALTER SCOTT, Old Mortality

Unblemished let me live, or die unknown;
O grant an honest fame, or grant me none!

ALEXANDER POPE, The Temple of Fame

To live in hearts we leave behind,
Is not to die.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, Hallowed Ground

Here we may reign secure, and in my choice
To reign is worth ambition, though in hell.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

With fame in just proportion, envy grows;
The man that makes a character, makes foes.

EDWARD YOUNG, Epistle to Pope

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar

Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues
We write in water.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
King Henry VIII

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
A Psalm of Life

Fame is a revenue payable only to our ghosts.

SIR GEORGE MACKENZIE

Glories, like glow-worms, afar off shine bright,
But looked to near have neither heat nor light.

JOHN WEBSTER, The White Devil

What's fame? A fancied life in others' breath,
A thing beyond us, even before our death.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

For what is fame
But the benignant strength of one transformed
To joy of many?

GEORGE ELIOT, Armstrong

¹Published by Harper & Brothers. Copyright 1937 by Edna St. Vincent Millay.

²From Poems by Emily Dickinson, edited by Martha Dickinson Bianchi and Alfred Leete Hampson; published by Little, Brown & Co.

Passion for fame; a passion which is the instinct of all great souls.

EDMUND BURKE,
Speech on American Taxation

Happy is the man who hath never known what it is to taste of fame—to have it is a Purgatory, to want it is a Hell!

BULWER-LYTTON, Last of the Barons

A little rule, a little sway,
A sunbeam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.

JOHN DYER, Grongar Hill

Familiarity

Familiarity breeds contempt.

Proverb

Familiarity begets boldness.

SHACKERLEY MARMION, The Antiquary

Fanaticism

Fanaticism soberly defined,
Is the false fire of an o'heated mind.

WILLIAM COWPER

Fashion

Darling, what is that?
Are you sure it is a hat?

OGDEN NASH, *The Face is Familiar*¹

The girdle business goes to pot
In summer, when the weather's hot.

MARGARET FISHBACK, *Time For a Quick One*²

There is not so variable a thing in Nature as a lady's head-dress.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Spectator

This is our chief bane, that we live not according to the light of reason, but after the fashion of others.

SENECA, Octavia

What used to be vices are become fashions.

SENECA

Fashion too often makes a monstrous noise,
Bids us, a fickle jade, like fools adore
The poorest trash, the meanest toys.

PETER PINDAR,
Odes to the Royal Academicians

Disguise it as you will,
To right or wrong 'tis fashion guides us still.
JOSEPH WARTON, Fashion

Fate

For this is Wisdom; to love, to live
To take what fate, or the Gods, may give.
To ask no question, to make no prayer,
To kiss the lips and caress the hair,
Speed passion's ebb as you greet its flow
To have,—to hold—and,—in time,—let go!

LAURENCE HOPE,
*The Complete Love Lyrics*¹

And whether I came in love or hate,
That I came to you was written by fate.

LAURENCE HOPE,
The Complete Love Lyrics

Human reason needs only to will more strongly than fate and she is fate.

THOMAS MANN, *The Magic Mountain*²

Thus, envious of another's state
Each blamed the partial hand of fate.

JOHN GAY, Fables

What fates impose, that men must needs abide;
It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI

Things are where things are, and as fate has willed,
So shall they be fulfilled.

ROBERT BROWNING, Agamemnon

Heaven from all creatures hides the book of Fate.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

Faults

The greatest fault, I should say, is to be conscious of none.

THOMAS CARLYLE,
Heroes and Hero Worship

When you have done a fault, be always pert and insolent and behave yourself as if you were the injured person.

JONATHAN SWIFT,
Rules that Concern Servants

We keep the faults of others before our eyes; our own behind our backs.

SENECA

He is all fault who hath no fault at all.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
Lancelot and Elaine

And he that does one fault at first
And lies to hide it, makes it two.

ISAAC WATTS,
Songs for Children

If we had no faults, we should not take so much pleasure in noticing them in others.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD

We never admit our faults, excepting through vanity.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD

Whosoever does not know how to recognize the faults of great men is incapable of estimating their perfections.

VOLTAIRE

They say, best men are moulded out of faults.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,

Measure for Measure

Bad men excuse their faults, good men will leave them.

He acts the third crime that defends the first.

BEN JONSON, Catiline

Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,

Measure for Measure

Fear

And feels a thousand deaths, in fearing one.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Fear always springs from ignorance.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Nothing is terrible except fear itself.

FRANCIS BACON, Fortitudo

We have won against the most dangerous of our foes. We have conquered fear.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,

Speech Accepting Renomination

Feelings

Those who would make us feel—must feel themselves.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Rosciad

There are some feelings that time cannot benumb.

LORD BYRON,

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Feelings are like chemicals, the more you analyze them, the worse they smell.

CHARLES KINGSLEY

Nothing is lost on him who sees
With an eye that feeling gave;
For him there's a story in every breeze,
And a picture in every wave.

THOMAS MOORE, Boat Glee

Fickleness

Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Hermit

Man wants but little; nor that little long.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Flattery

Strive not to hew your path through life—
it really doesn't pay;

Be sure the salve of flattery soaps all you do and say.

EUGENE FIELD, *Uncle Eph*¹

But when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does, being then most flattered.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar

O flatt'ry!

How soon thy smooth insinuating oil
Supples the toughest food!

ELIJAH FENTON, Mariamne

When flattery does not succeed it is not the fault of flattery, but of the flatterer.

PIERRE GASTON, Maxims

Flatterers look like friends, as wolves like dogs.

GEORGE CHAPMAN,

Conspiracy of Charles, Duke of Byron

If we did not flatter ourselves, the flattery of other people would not harm us.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD

Foolishness

Since trifles make the sum of human things,
And half our misery from our foibles springs.

HANNAH MORE, Sensibility

For fools rush in where angels fear to tread.

ALEXANDER POPE,

Essay on Criticism

Forgetfulness

And out of mind as soon as out of sight.

LORD BROOKE

Forgiveness

The offender never pardons.

GEORGE HERBERT,

Jacula Prudentum

"I can forgive, but I cannot forget," is only another way of saying, "I cannot forgive."

HENRY WARD BEECHER,

Life Thoughts

Forgive! How many will say "forgive," and find
A sort of absolution in the sound
To hate a little longer.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, Sea Dreams

Fortune

O Fortune, unkind to men of talent, how unequally do you distribute your rewards!

SENECA, Hercules Furens

¹From The Poems of Eugene Field. Reprinted by permission of Charles Scribner's Sons.

Extremes of fortune are true wisdom's test
And he's of men most wise who bears them best.

RICHARD CUMBERLAND, Philemon

A great fortune is a great bondage.

SENECA, De Consolatione

Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to importune,
He had not the method of making a fortune.

THOMAS GRAY

Fortune knows
We scorn her most, when most she offers blows.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Antony and Cleopatra

Freedom (See also Americanism)

No man loveth his fetters, be they made of gold.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

When liberty is gone,
Life grows insipid and has lost its relish.

JOSEPH ADDISON

Liberty too must be limited in order to be possessed.

EDMUND BURKE, Letter

Liberty is not in any form of government. It is in the heart of free man; he carries it with him everywhere.

JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU
Emile, or Education

Men rattle their chains to show that they are free.

Proverb

The love of liberty is the love of others; the love of power is the love of ourselves.

WILLIAM HAZLITT,
The Toad Eaters

Pray you use your freedom and so far, if you please, allow me mine.

PHILIP MASSINGER, Duke of Milan

The cause of Freedom is the cause of God.

WILLIAM LISLE BOWLES, To Edmund Burke

He is a free man whom the truth makes free.

WILLIAM COWPER,
Winter Morning Walk

The greatest glory of a freeborn people is to transmit that freedom to their children.

WILLIAM HARVARD, Regulus

A day, an hour, a virtuous liberty
Is worth a whole eternity in bondage.

JOSEPH ADDISON, Cato

O liberty! liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!

MADAME ROLAND

Freedom has a thousand charms to show,
That slaves, howe'er contented, never know.

WILLIAM COWPER, Table Talk

Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.

THOMAS JEFFERSON,
First Inaugural Address

Free Speech (See also Americanism)

This is true liberty, when freeborn men, having to advise the public, may speak free.

JOHN MILTON,
Translation of Euripides

To speak his thought is ever freeman's right,
In peace and war, in council and in fight.

ALEXANDER POPE, Iliad of Homer

Friendship

Friendship! mysterious cement of the soul!
Sweetener of life! and solder of society!

ROBERT BLAIR, The Grave

Friends are as dangerous as enemies.

THOMAS DE QUINCEY,
Essay on Schlosser's Literary History

After their friendship there is nothing so dangerous as to have them for enemies.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letters to His Son

Friendship is Love without his wings.

LORD BYRON,
L'Amitié est l'Amour sans Ailes

Lay this unto your breast:

Old friends, like old swords, still are trusted best.

JOHN WEBSTER,
The Duchess of Malfi

A stranger's kindness oft exceeds a friend's.

THOMAS MIDDLETON

Ships that pass in the night, and speak each other in passing,
Only a signal shown, and a distant voice in the darkness.

So on the ocean of life we pass and speak one another.

Only a look and a voice, then darkness again and a silence.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Tales of a Wayside Inn

An open foe may prove a curse,
But a pretended friend is worse.

JOHN GAY, Fables

A broken friendship may be soldered, but will never be sound.

Proverb

Tell me the company you keep, and I'll tell you who you are.

Proverb

A pleasant possession is useless without a comrade.

SENECA

A friend to everybody is a friend to nobody.

Proverb

No great genius is without an admixture of madness.

ARISTOTLE

It is prosperity that gives us friends, adversity that proves them.

Proverb

Women do not have friends—they only have rivals.

EDMOND GONDINET, Jonathan

The only way to have a friend is to be one.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Friendship

Friendship excels kinship.

CICERO

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals.

FRANCIS BACON, Of Followers

Old friends are best. King James used to call for his old shoes; they were easiest for his feet.

JOHN SELDEN, Friends

The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Fulfillment

He gave to misery (all he had) a tear;
He gained from heaven ('twas all he wished) a friend.

THOMAS GRAY,

Elegy in a Country Churchyard

Futility

You cannot get blood out of a stone.

Proverb

'Tis no good planting boiled potatoes.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON,
John Ploughman

Gain

Gain cannot be made without some other person's loss.

PUBLILIUS SYRUS

Genius

Time, place, and action may with pains be wrought,
But Genius must be born; and never can be taught.

JOHN DRYDEN, Epistle to Congreve

Genius can only breathe freely in an atmosphere of freedom.

JOHN STUART MILL, Liberty

Since when was genius found respectable?

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING,
Aurora Leigh

Adverse fortune reveals genius; prosperity hides it.

HORACE

God

God never made his work for man to mend.

JOHN DRYDEN, Epistle to John Dryden

God will estimate success one day.

ROBERT BROWNING,

Prince Hohenstiel-Schwangau

If God had not existed it would have been necessary to invent him.

VOLTAIRE,

To the author of The Three Impostors

If God is not in us, He never existed.

VOLTAIRE, La Loi Naturelle

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

WILLIAM COWPER,

Light Shining out of Darkness

God sends us meat, the devil sends us cooks.

Proverb

God's mills grind slow, but sure.

GEORGE HERBERT,

Jacula Prudentum

Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting,
with exactness grinds He all.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, Retribution

God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb.

LAURENCE STERNE,

A Sentimental Journey

God is more truly imagined than expressed, and He exists more truly than He is imagined.

ST. AUGUSTINE,

De Trinitate

He was a wise man who originated the idea of God.

PLATO, Sisyphus

God is the brave man's hope, and not the coward's excuse.

PLUTARCH, Morals

God made the country, and man made the town.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Task

God enters by a private door into every individual.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Intellect

God's in His Heaven—
All's right with the world.

ROBERT BROWNING, Pippa Passes

God, I can push the grass apart
And lay my fingers on Thy heart.

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY,
*Renascence*¹

Goodness

Good, the more communicated, more abundant grows.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men, observingly, distil it out.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry IV

Gossip

A cruel story runs on wheels, and every hand oils the wheels as they run.

OUIDA, Moths

He's gone, and who knows how he may report
Thy words by adding fuel to the flame?

JOHN MILTON, Samson Agonistes

Who by aspersions throw a stone
At the head of others, hit their own.

GEORGE HERBERT, Charms and Knots

None are so fond of secrets as those who do not mean to keep them.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

There is no radical cure for the busybody, no more than there is for the fleas on a long-haired dog—if you get rid of the fleas you have got the dog left, and if you get rid of the dog you have got the fleas left, and so, where are you?

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Take not informers' words on trust.

JOHN GAY, Fables

Who deals in slander lives in strife.

JOHN GAY, Fables

I remember that a wise friend of mine did usually say: That which is everybody's business is no-body's business.

IZAACK WALTON,
The Compleat Angler

Government (See also Americanism)

Every nation has the government it deserves.

JOSEPH DE MAISTRE, Letter

Spare the spurs, boy, and hold the reins more firmly.

OVID, Metamorphoses

You can only govern men by serving them
The rule is without exception.

VICTOR COUSIN

A manly assertion by each of his individual rights and a manly concession of equal rights to every other man, is the law of good citizenship.

BENJAMIN HARRISON

Gratitude

No metaphysician ever felt the deficiency of language so much as the grateful.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

Wherever I find a great deal of gratitude in a poor man, I take it for granted there would be so much generosity if he were a rich man.

ALEXANDER POPE,

Thoughts on Various Subjects

Only fools are unable to support that crushing load which we call gratitude.

EUGÈNE MARIN LABICHE, M. Perrichon

One good turn deserves another.

Proverb

Greatness

High stations tumult, but not bliss, create;
None think the great unhappy but the great.

EDWARD YOUNG, Love of Fame

Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Twelfth Night

Little minds are tamed and subdued by misfortune,
But great minds rise above it.

WASHINGTON IRVING,
The Sketch Book

Nothing is more simple than greatness; indeed, to be simple is to be great.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Literary Ethics

To be great is to be misunderstood.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Self-Reliance

It is always interesting, in the case of a great man, to know how he affected the women of his acquaintance.

LORD MORLEY, Burke

The world knows nothing of its greatest men.

SIR HENRY TAYLOR,
Philip van Artevelde

Great wits and valors, like great estates,
Do sometimes sink with their own weights.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

He is only a great man, who can neglect the applause of the multitude, and enjoy himself independent of its favor.

RICHARD STEELE, Spectator

Grief (See also Despair and Sorrow)

Grief best is pleased with grief's society.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Rape of Lucrece

No greater grief than to remember days
Of joy when misery is at hand.

DANTE ALIGHIERI, Hell

The private wound is deepest.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Two Gentlemen of Verona

When griefs have partners they are better borne.

THOMAS MIDDLETON,
Your Five Gallants

Light burdens long borne grow heavy.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum

None knows the weight of another's burden.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum

Half of the ills we hoard within our hearts
Are ills because we hoard them.

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER,
Mirandola

While grief is fresh, any attempt to divert it only irritates.

SAMUEL JOHNSON

Depend upon it, that, if a man talks of his misfortunes, there is something in them that is not disagreeable to him; for where there is nothing but pure misery, there never is any recourse to the mention of it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON

A great sorrow is a great repose, and you will come out from your grief stronger than when you entered it.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS,
Mme. de Chomblay

Guilt

Guilt proves the hardest nearest home.

JAMES HOGG, The Pedlar

Habit

Habit, the instrument of nature, is a great leveler:
the familiarity which it induces takes off the edge
both of our pleasures and our sufferings.

WILLIAM PALEY,
Natural Theology

Habit becomes a kind of second nature which acts as a motive for many of our actions.

CICERO

Happiness

The lesson we suffer the most in learning:

That a happy man is a man forgetful of all the torturing ills around him.

EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON,
*The Night Before*¹

All who joy would win
Must share it—happiness was born a twin.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

No man is happy. Man strives all his life through for imaginary happiness, which he seldom attains, and if he does, it is only to be disillusioned.

ARTHUR SCHOPENHAUER,
Emptiness of Existence

The little-known art of being happy.

VOLTAIRE, Sur l'Usage de la Vie

One is never so happy or so unhappy as one imagines.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

A man must seek his happiness and inward peace from objects which cannot be taken away from him.

WILHELM VON HUMBOLDT

And there is ev'n a happiness
That makes the heart afraid.

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Melancholy

Know then this truth (enough for man to know),
Virtue alone is happiness below.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

When one is contented, there is no more to be desired; and when there is no more to be desired, there is an end of it.

MIGUEL DE CERVANTES, Don Quixote

Happy he who has succeeded in learning the causes of things.

VERGIL

Happy he who dares courageously to defend what he loves.

OVID

O happiness! our being's end and aim!
Good, pleasure, ease, content! whate'er thy name:

That something still which prompts the eternal sigh,

For which we bear to live, or dare to die.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

Happiness depends, as Nature shows,
Less on exterior things than most suppose.

WILLIAM COWPER, Table Talk

Haste

The more haste the lesse speede.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

Haste makes waste, and waste makes want, and want makes strife between the good man and his wife.

Proverb

¹From The Children of the Night, published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Hate

Now hatred is by far the longest pleasure!
Men love in haste, but they detest at leisure.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

People hate the ones who make them feel their own inferiority.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters

Love, friendship, respect, will never unite people as much as a common hatred for something.

ANTON PAVLOVICH CHEKHOV,
Note-Books

They did not know how hate can burn
In hearts once changed from soft to stern.

LORD BYRON

In time we hate that which we often fear.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Antony and Cleopatra

Hatred is like fire—it makes even light rubbish deadly.

GEORGE ELIOT, Janet's Repentance

Hell

Hell is paved with good intentions.

JAMES BOSWELL,
Life of Samuel Johnson

Heroes

In short, he was a perfect cavaliero,
And to his very valet seemed a hero.

LORD BYRON, Beppo

Every hero becomes a bore at last.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Representative Men

Whoe'er excels in what we prize
Appears a hero in our eyes.

JONATHAN SWIFT

History (See also Americanism)

History, a distillation of Rumour.

THOMAS CARLYLE,
The French Revolution

History is full of the errors of states and princes.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Autobiography

Home

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.

JOHN HOWARD PAYNE,
Home, Sweet Home

Our friends are as true, and our wives are as comely,

And our home is still home, be it ever so homely.

CHARLES DIBDIN, Songs

Honesty

Honesty rare as a man without self-pity,
Kindness as large and plain as a prairie wind.

STEPHEN VINCENT BENÉT,
*John Brown's Body*¹

And looks the whole world in the face,
For he owes not any man.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Village Blacksmith

Honesty is the best policy.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

Too much honesty never harmed a man.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia

It is my own opinion that every man cheats in his own way, and he is only honest who is not discovered.

SUSANNAH CENTLIVRE,
The Artifice

An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
King Richard III

He that loseth his honestie hath nothing else to lose.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues

Hope

The worst is not
So long as we can say, "this is the worst."

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Lear

The miserable have no other medicine,
But only hope.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Measure for Measure

While there is life there's hope.

JOHN GAY, The Sick Man and the Angel

Hope springs eternal in the human breast.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

The rose is fairest when it is budding new,
And hope is brightest when it dawns from fears.

SIR WALTER SCOTT, Lady of the Lake

Hope never leaves a wretched man that seeks her.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER,
The Captain

It has been well said: "Man is based on Hope;
he has properly no other possession but Hope;
this habitation of his is named the Place of Hope."

THOMAS CARLYLE,
The French Revolution

¹From Selected Works of Stephen Vincent Benét, published by Rinehart & Company, Inc. Copyright 1927, 1928 by Stephen Vincent Benét.

But love can hope where reason would despair.

LORD LYTTTELTON, Epigram

Above the cloud with its shadow is the star with its light.

VICTOR HUGO

A drowning man will catch at a straw.

Proverb

The wretch condemned with life to part.

Still, still on hope relies;

And every pang that rends the heart

Bids expectation rise.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Captivity

Hope, like the gleaming taper's light,

Adorns and cheers our way;

And still, as darker grows the night

Emits a brighter ray.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Captivity

Hope! thou nurse of young desire.

ISAAC BICKERSTAFF,

Love in a Village

Hope, of all ills that men endure,

The only cheap and universal cure.

Humanity

All that is human must retrograde if it do not advance.

EDWARD GIBBON,

Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire

Love, hope, fear, faith—these make humanity;

These are its sign, and note and character.

ROBERT BROWNING, Paracelsus

O wearisome condition of humanity!

LORD BROOKE, Mustapha

Human Nature

We have hearts within:

Warm, live, improvident, indecent hearts.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING,

Aurora Leigh

You cannot slander human nature; it is worse than words can paint it.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON, Salt-Cellars

Our soul is full of a thousand internal contrarities.

PLATO, Republic

Every heart, when sifted well,

Is a clot of warmer dust,

Mix'd with cunning sparks of hell.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,

The Vision of Sin

No one likes to be disturbed at meals or love.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Hobbes clearly proves that every creature

Lives in a state of war by nature.

JONATHAN SWIFT, Poetry

Man dreams of Fame, while woman wakes to Love.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,

Merlin and Vivien

Human nature will not flourish, any more than a potato, if it be planted and replanted for too long a series of generations, in the same worn-out soil.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE,

Humility

Humility is a virtue all preach, none practice, and yet everybody is content to hear.

JOHN SELDEN, Humility

Hypocrisy

Hypocrisy is the homage vice pays to virtue.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

Yet do I fear thy nature;

It is too full o' the milk of human kindness.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,

My heart detests him as the gates of hell.

ALEXANDER POPE, The Iliad

When I see a merchant over-polite to his customers, begging them to take a little brandy, and throwing his goods on the counter, thinks I, that man has an ax to grind.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,

Poor Richard's Almanac

He holds with the hare, and runs with the hound.

Proverb

An hypocrite is a gilded pill, composed of two natural ingredients, natural dishonesty, and artificial dissimulation.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY,

Characters: An Hypocrite

Idleness

An idle brain is the devil's workshop.

Proverb

¹Reprinted by permission of J. B. Lippincott Company.

An idler is a watch that wants both hands:
As useless when it goes as when it stands.

WILLIAM COWPER, Retirement

Absence of occupation is not rest,
A mind quite vacant is a mind distressed.

WILLIAM COWPER, Retirement

Idleness is only the refuge of weak minds, and the holiday of fools.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letters to His Son

The doer is better than the critic, and the man who strives stands far above the man who stands aloof.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Ignorance

Where ignorance is bliss
'Tis folly to be wise.

THOMAS GRAY,
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College

Have the courage to be ignorant of a great number of things, in order to avoid the calamity of being ignorant of everything.

SYDNEY SMITH,
Lectures on Moral Philosophy

From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise.

MATTHEW PRIOR

A blind man should not judge of colors.
Proverb

Your ignorance is the mother of your devotion to me.

JOHN DRYDEN, The Maiden Queen

Imagination

To see a world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower.

WILLIAM BLAKE,
Auguries of Innocence

Don't let us make imaginary evils, when you know we have so many real ones to encounter.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH,
The Good-Natured Man

Imitation

Imitation is the sincerest of flattery.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

No man was ever great by imitation.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Rasselas

Imperfection

Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And loathsome canker lies in sweetest bud.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Sonnet

Every bean hath its black.

Proverb

Every white will have its black,
And every sweet its sour.

THOMAS PERCY, Reliques

Improvement

And make each day a critic on the last.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,
But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI

Inconsistency

The greatest men
May ask a foolish question now and then.

PETER PINDAR,
The Apple Dumpling and the King

Do not grudge
To pick out treasures from an earthen pot.
The worst speak something good.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church Porch

Indication

A cold hand, a warm heart.

Proverb

Indispensability

Trust me, To-day's Most Indispensables,
Five hundred men can take your place or mine.

RUDYARD KIPLING, Departmental Ditties

Individuality

Literary history and all history is a record of the power of minorities, and of minorities of one.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Progress of Culture

Whatever crushes individuality is despotism, by whatever name it may be called.

JOHN STUART MILL, Liberty

Absolute individualism is an absurdity.

HENRI FRÉDÉRIC AMIEL

Inevitability

Come what come may;
Time and the hour run through the roughest day.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

Innocence

An innocent heart is a brittle thing, and one false vow can break it.

BULWER-LYTTON,
Last of the Barons

Insight

A moment's insight is sometimes worth a life's experience.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
The Professor at the Breakfast Table

Instinct

And to all this fame he rose,
Only following his nose.

WILLIAM COWPER, On a Pointer Dog

Swift instinct leaps; slow reason feebly climbs.
EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Institution

An institution is the lengthened shadow of one man.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Self-Reliance

Insult

A moral, sensible, and well-bred man
Will not affront me, and no other can.

WILLIAM COWPER, Conversation

There is nothing that people bear more impatiently, or forgive less, than contempt; and an injury is much sooner forgotten than an insult.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

Insults are like bad coins; we cannot help their being offered to us, but we need not take them.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON, Salt-Cellars

Intelligence

All men see the same objects, but all men do not equally understand them. Intelligence is the tongue that discerns and tastes them.

THOMAS TRAHERNE,
Centuries of Meditations

Intentions

When any great design thou dost intend,
Think on the means, the manner and the end.

SIR JOHN DENHAM

Interference

Those who in quarrels interpose,
Must often wipe a bloody nose.

JOHN GAY, Fables

Irritation

Rub a galled horse, he will kick.

Proverb

Jealousy

Jealousy,
... the injur'd lover's hell.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

O! beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Othello

A jealous woman believes everything her passion suggests.

JOHN GAY, The Beggar's Opera

What frenzy dictates, jealousy believes.

JOHN GAY, Dione

Love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave.

The Song of Solomon

Judgment

Give every man thine ear but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Remember, when the judgment's weak the prejudice is strong.

KANE O'HARA, Midas

Men see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion.

JOHN LOCKE

I am monarch of all I survey;
My right there is none to dispute.

WILLIAM COWPER,
Verses Supposed to be Written by Alexander Selkirk

'Ere you remark another's sin,
Bid thy own conscience look within.

JOHN GAY, Fables

We are firm believers in the maxim that, for all right judgment of any man or thing, it is useful, nay, essential, to see his good qualities before pronouncing on his bad.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Goethe

And how his audit stands who knows, save heaven?

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Be to her virtues very kind;
Be to her faults a little blind.

MATTHEW PRIOR
An English Paolock

Justice

Give the devil his due.

Proverb

Every dog must have his day.

JOHN THOMAS RANDOLPH,
The Townsman's Petition

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, and dog will have his day.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein.

Proverbs

Kissing

Kissing an unwilling pair of lips is as mean a victory as robbing a bird's nest, and kissing too willing ones is about as unfragrant a recreation as making bouquets out of dandelions.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Knowledge (See also Learning)

What can we reason but from what we know?

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

Knowledge dwells

In heads replete with thoughts of other men:
Wisdom, in minds attentive to their own.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Task

Knowledge is a treasure but practice is the key to it.

Proverb

Half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

Knowledge is not happiness, and science
But an exchange of ignorance for that
Which is another kind of ignorance.

LORD BYRON, Manfred

Knowledge is the antidote to fear.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Courage

A man without knowledge, and I have read,
May well be compared to one that is dead.

THOMAS INGELAND,
The Disobedient Child

Knowledge is power.

FRANCIS BACON, Meditationes Sacrae

A man is but what he knoweth.

FRANCIS BACON, In Praise of Knowledge

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
Locksley Hall

Knowledge is of two kinds. We know a subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,
in Boswell's Life of Johnson

No man's knowledge, here, can go beyond his experience.

JOHN LOCKE,
Essay on the Human Understanding

He who knows not and knows not that he knows not is a fool—avoid him!

He who knows and knows not that he knows is asleep—waken him!

He who knows not and knows that he knows not wants beating—beat him!

But he who knows and knows that he knows is a wise man—know him.

Proverb

Laughter

There is one kind of a laugh that I always did recommend; it looks out of the eye first with a merry twinkle, then it creeps down on its hands and knees and plays around the mouth like a pretty moth around the blaze of a candle, then it steals over into the dimples of the cheeks and rides around in those little whirlpools for a while, then it lights up the whole face like the mellow bloom on a damask rose, then it swims up on the air, with a peal as clear and as happy as a dinner-bell, then it goes back again on gold tiptoes like an angel out for an airing, and lies down on its little bed of violets in the heart where it came from.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

How much lies in laughter: the cipher-key, wherewith we decipher the whole man.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus

Laughter is my object; 'tis a property
In man essential to his reason.

THOMAS RANDOLPH,
The Muses' Looking-Glass

And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village

Laugh while you can. Everything has its time.

VOLTAIRE

Law

Laws are like cobwebs that entangle the weak, but are broken by the strong.

SOLON

Law is the protector of the weak.

FRIEDRICH SCHILLER

A good law is one that holds, whether you recognize it or not; a bad law is one that cannot, however much you ordain it.

JOHN RUSKIN

Learning (See also Knowledge)

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.

ALEXANDER POPE,
Essay on Criticism

Learn, but learn from the learned.

CATO

The mind is slow in unlearning what it has been long in learning.

SENECA, Troades

Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much.
Wisdom is humble, that he knows no more.

WILLIAM COWPER,
Winter Walk at Noon

Learned fools are the greatest fools.

Proverb

Learning makes the wise wiser, but the fool more foolish.

Proverb

All men naturally desire to know.

ARISTOTLE

Happy is the man who sees his folly in his youth.

Proverb

Learning by study must be won;
'Twas ne'er entailed from son to son.

JOHN GAY, Fables

Liberalism

Liberalism is trust of the people, tempered by prudence; Conservatism, distrust of the people, tempered by fear.

WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE

Lies

And, after all, what is a lie? It is but the truth in masquerade.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Liars should have good memories.

Proverb

A lie travels round the world while Truth is putting on her boots.

CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON,
Truth and Falsehood

Life (or) Living

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may—
This is the sum of his earthy day.
And when the whole of it's done and said,
"Up, to the office . . . and so to bed."

FRANKLIN P. ADAMS, *So Much Velvet*¹

Man to the last is but a forward child;
So eager for the future, come what may,
And to the present so insensible!

SAMUEL ROGERS, Reflections

Life is indestructible:
Its holy flame forever burneth:
From Heaven it came, to Heaven returneth.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, The Curse of Kehama

To live and move among men, the heart must break or harden.

SÉBASTIEN R. N. CHAMFORT

Life is short and the art long.

HIPPOCRATES, Aphorisms

Life is a game, at which everybody loses.

SARKADI SCHULLER,
Within Four Walls

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Psalms of Life

Live every day as if thy last.

MARCUS AURELIUS

We are born crying, live complaining, and die disappointed.

Proverb

Life is a series of surprises.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
All's Well That Ends Well

Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day.

PHILIP DODDRIDGE,
Epigram on His Family Motto

Life differs from the play only in this . . . it has no plot . . . all is vague, desultory, unconnected
. . . till the curtain drops with the mystery unsolved.

BULWER-LYTTON, Godolphin

Life is a great bundle of little things.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
Professor at the Breakfast Table

Let Nature and let Art do what they please,
When all is done, Life's an incurable disease.

ABRAHAM COWLEY,
Ode to Dr. Scarborough

Limitation

There is no stretching of power. 'Tis a good rule:
Eat within your stomach, act within your commission.

JOHN SELDEN

As we advance in life we learn the limits of our abilities.

JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE,
Short Studies on Great Subjects

Logic

Take a straw and throw it up into the air, you may see by that which way the wind is.

JOHN SELDEN, Libels

Cause and effect are two sides of one fact.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Circles

Set a thief to catch a thief.

Proverb

Loneliness (See also Solitude)

So lonely 'twas, that God Himself Scarce seemed there to be.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,
The Ancient Mariner

Love

Here's my strength and my weakness, gents—
I loved them until they loved me.

DOROTHY PARKER, *Not So Deep As a Well*¹

Oh, gallant was the first love, and glittering and fine;

The second love was water, in a clear white cup;
The third love was his, and the fourth was mine;
And after that, I always get them all mixed up.

DOROTHY PARKER, *Not So Deep As a Well*¹

Ah, when Love comes his wings are swift;
His ways are full of quick surprise;
'Tis well for those who have the gift
To seize him even as he flies.

LAURENCE HOPE,
*The Complete Love Lyrics*²

Why is Love such a sorrowful thing,
This I never could understand:
Pain and passion are linked together,
Ever I find them hand in hand.

LAURENCE HOPE,
*The Complete Love Lyrics*²

Love's a thing that's never out of season.

BARRY CORNWALL

A woman in love is a very poor judge of character.

J. G. HOLLAND

In dreams and in love there are no impossibilities.

JÁNOS ARANY

You should be more concerned with being lovely than being loved.

A. BERGGREN,
The Lionhearted

Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind;
And therefore is winged Cupid painted blind.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
A Midsummer Night's Dream

For aught that I could ever read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
A Midsummer Night's Dream

And yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
A Midsummer Night's Dream

Of all the pain, the greatest pain,
It is to love, but love in vain.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Anacreontics

We are all born for love. It is the principle of existence, and its only end.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sibyl

God, from a beautiful necessity, is Love.

MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER, Of Immortality

In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
Locksley Hall

It's good to be off wi' the old love
Before ye be on wi' the new.

SIR WALTER SCOTT,
The Bride of Lammermoor

Love and a red nose can't be hid.

THOMAS HOLCROFT, Duplicity

Heaven has no rage like love to hatred turned,
Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned.

WILLIAM CONGREVE,
The Mourning Bride

They sin who tell us Love can die:
With Life all other passions fly,
All others are but vanity.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, The Curse of Kehama

Pains of love be sweeter far
Than all other pleasures are.

JOHN DRYDEN, Tyrannic Love

Love lives in cottages as well as in courts.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs

Say thou dost love me, love me, love me—toll
The silver iterance!—only minding, Dear,
To love me also in silence with thy soul.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING,
Sonnets from the Portuguese

Man's love is of man's life a thing apart;
It is woman's whole existence.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

All mankind loves a lover.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Love

In their first passion women love their lover;
and in all the others, they love love.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

They do not love that do not show their love.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

I feel it when I sorrow most:
It is better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
In Memoriam

Love is a platform upon which all ranks meet.
SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK GILBERT,
H. M. S. Pinafore

Then, must you speak
Of one that loved not wisely but too well.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Othello

Such is the nature of women, . . . not to love when we love them, and to love when we love them not.
MIGUEL DE CERVANTES, Don Quixote

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments: love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets

Of all the paths lead to a woman's love,
Pity's the straightest.
BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER,
The Knight of Malta

No sooner met but they looked, no sooner looked than they loved, no sooner loved than they sighed, no sooner sighed but they asked one another the reason, no sooner knew the reason but they sought the remedy.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It

Love sought is good, but given unsought is better.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night

But love is blind and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Merchant of Venice

Men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
As You Like It

Friendship is constant in all other things
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself
And trust no agent.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado About Nothing

Speak low if you speak love.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado about Nothing

That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Two Gentlemen of Verona

We learn only from those we love.
JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE,
Conversation with Eckermann

All is fair in love and war.
FRANCIS EDWARD SMEDLEY, Frank Fairleigh

Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one.
FRIEDRICH HALM,
Ingomar the Barbarian

Change everything but your loves.
VOLTAIRE, Sur l'Usage de la Vie

Who ever loved that loved not at first sight?
CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE,
Hero and Leander

Those who are faithful know only the trivial side of love: it is the faithless who know love's tragedies.
OSCAR WILDE, Picture of Dorian Gray

When poverty comes in at the door, love creeps out at the window.
THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia

It is an unhappy circumstance that the man so often should outlive the lover.
WILLIAM CONGREVE,
The Way of the World

Love reckons hours for months, and days for years;
And every little absence is an age.
JOHN DRYDEN, Amphitryon

He that will win his dame, must do
As love does when he bends his bow;
With one hand thrust the lady from,
And with the other pull her home.
SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

The heart once broken is a heart no more,
And is absolved from all a heart must be;
All that it signed or chartered heretofore
Is cancelled now, the bankrupt heart is free.
EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY,
*Fatal Interview*¹

I find some woman bearing as I bear
Love like a burning city in the breast.
EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY,
*Fatal Interview*¹

Man

Two and two are merely four
And often less and never more,
And I, for all the world's advance,
An upright mammal wearing pants.
SAMUEL HOFFENSTEIN, *Year In, You're Out*²

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth.
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Two Gentlemen of Verona

Man!

Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear.

LORD BYRON, Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Men are but children of a larger growth.

JOHN DRYDEN, All for Love

Men of few words are the best men.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Henry V

Man has his will—but woman has her way.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, Prologue

Man is the creature of circumstance.

ROBERT OWEN, The Philanthropist

Man's the creature of habit.

CHARLES DICKENS, The Battle of Life

Man is the hunter; woman is his game.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
The Princess

Man is an embodied paradox, a bundle of contradictions.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

Man is Nature's sole mistake.

SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK GILBERT,
Princess Ida

Man punishes the action, but God the intention.

Proverb

Ah! how unjust to nature, and himself,
Is thoughtless, thankless, inconsistent man!

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Marriage

Marriage, at best, is but a vow,
Which all men either break or bow.

SAMUEL BUTLER,
The Lady's Answer to the Knight

When I said I would die a bachelor,
I did not think I should live till I were married.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado about Nothing

Some marry in haste, and then set down and think it careful over.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Marriages are made in Heaven.

Proverb

Thus grief still treads upon the heels of pleasure;
Married in haste, we may repent at leisure.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, The Old Bachelor

Oh! how many torments lie in the small circle of a wedding-ring!

COLLEY CIBBER, The Double Gallant

Is not marriage an open question, when it is alleged, from the beginning of the world, that such as are in the institution wish to get out, and such as are out wish to get in?

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Representative Men: Montaigne

Marry your son when you will; your daughter when you can.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum

Needles and pins, needles and pins!
When a man marries his trouble begins.

Old Nursery Rhyme

Advice to person about to marry.—Don't.

HENRY MAYHEW, Punch's Almanac

One was never married, and that's his hell; another is and that's his plague.

ROBERT BURTON,
Anatomy of Melancholy

Choose not alone a proper mate,
But a proper time to marry.

WILLIAM COWPER, Pairing Time

Remember, it's as easy to marry a rich woman as a poor woman.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY,
Pendennis

In married life three is company and two none.

OSCAR WILDE,
The Importance of Being Earnest

Marriage has many pains, but celibacy has no pleasures.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Rasselas

Melancholy

There is a mood

(I sing not to the vacant and the young),

There is a kindly mood of melancholy,

That wings the soul, and points her to the skies.

JOHN DYER, The Ruins of Rome

Melancholy is a fearful gift;
What is it but the telescope of truth?

LORD BYRON

Melancholy

Sits on me, as a cloud along the sky,
Which will not let the sunbeams through, nor yet

Descend in rain, and end.

LORD BYRON

Go,—you may call it madness, folly;
You shall not chase my gloom away!
There's such a charm in melancholy
I would not, if I could, be gay.

SAMUEL ROGERS, To ———

There's not a string attuned to mirth
But has its chord in melancholy.

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Melancholy

Memory

How cruelly sweet are the echoes that start,
When memory plays an old tune on the heart!

ELIZA COOK, Old Dobbin

Of joys departed,
Not to return, how painful the remembrance!

ROBERT BLAIR, The Grave

I remember, I remember
How my childhood fled by—
The mirth of its December,
And the warmth of its July.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED,

I Remember, I Remember

Mercy (See also Pity)

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice bless'd:
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,

Merchant of Venice

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me.

ALEXANDER POPE,

The Universal Prayer

They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

To err is human, to forgive divine.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Sweet Mercy is nobility's true badge.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,

Titus Andronicus

Middle Age (See also Aging)

Life declines from thirty-five.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,

To Mrs. Thrale, When Thirty-five

And man not old, but mellow, like good wine.

STEPHEN PHILLIPS, Ulysses

Be wise with speed;
A fool at forty is a fool indeed.

EDWARD YOUNG, Love of Fame

At thirty, man suspects himself a fool;
Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

A man of 40 today has nothing to worry him but falling hair, inability to button the top button, failing vision, shortness of breath, a tendency of the collar to shut off all breathing, trembling of the kidneys to whatever tune the orchestra is playing, and a general sense of giddiness when the matter of the rent is brought up. 40 is Life's Golden Age.

ROBERT BENCHLEY, *From Bed to Worse*¹

Mind

The mind's the standard of the man.

ISAAC WATTS, False Greatness

My mind to me a kingdom is;
Such perfect joy therein I find
As far exceeds all earthly bliss
That God and nature hath assigned.

SIR EDWARD DYER,

Byrd's Psalmes

A mind not to be changed by place or time.
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

Mischief

For Satan finds some mischief still,
For idle hands to do.

ISAAC WATTS, Songs for Children

Misery (See also Grief)

Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest

Mockery

Mockery is the fume of little hearts.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, Guinevere

Moderation

Out of moderation a pure happiness springs.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE,

Die Natürliche Tochter

Moderation is the silken string running through the pearl-chain of all virtues.

THOMAS FULLER, Of Moderation

Modesty

Modesty is the only sure bait when you angle for praise.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,

Letters to His Son

Money

Sing a song of sixpence,
And sing it till you die;
And this I'll bet, you'll never get
A pocketful of rye.

SAMUEL HOFFENSTEIN, *Year In, You're Out*²

Certainly, there are lots of things in life that money won't buy, but it's very funny—
Have you ever tried to buy them without money?

But the jingling of the guinea helps the hurt that honor feels.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
Locksley Hall

The almighty dollar—that great object of universal devotion throughout our land!

WASHINGTON IRVING,
The Creole Village

If you would know the value of money, go and try to borrow some; for he that goes a-borrowing goes a-sorrowing.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

The lust of gold succeeds the rays of conquest;
The lust of gold, unfeeling and remorseless!
The last corruption of degenerate man.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Irene

Gold—Goid! gold! gold! gold!
Bright and yellow, hard and cold.

THOMAS HOOD, Miss Kilmansegg

And his best riches, ignorance of wealth.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH,
The Deserted Village

For what is worth in anything
But so much money as 'twill bring?

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

Make money! If you can, make money honestly;
if not, by whatever means you can, make money.

HORACE

There are few ways in which a man can be more innocently employed than in getting money.

SAMUEL JOHNSON

Put not your trust in money; put your money in trust.

American saying

Money is like muck, not good except it be spread.

FRANCIS BACON, Of Seditions

Yes, ready money is Aladdin's lamp.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Americans have little faith. They rely on the power of the dollar.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Man the Reformer

Moonlight

This night methinks is but the daylight sick.
It looks a little paler; 'tis a day,
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music

Creep in our ears; soft stillness and the night
Become the touches of sweet harmony.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

The queen of night, whose large command
Rules all the sea, and half the land.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

Morals

Morals are a personal affair; in the war of righteousness every man fights for his own hand.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, Lay Morals

Morning

The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Richard III

Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
With charm of earliest birds.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

At length the world, renew'd by calm repose,
Was strong for toil, the dappled morn arose.

THOMAS PARNELL, The Hermit

I now, an early riser, love to hail
The dreamy struggles of the stars with light,
And the recovering breath of earth, sleep-drowned
Awakening to the wisdom of the sun.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

Night wanes—the vapours round the mountains
curl'd

Melt into morn, and light awakes the world.

LORD BYRON, Laura

Music

Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast,
To soften rocks, or bend a knotted oak.

WILLIAM CONGREVE,
The Mourning Bride

The only universal tongue.

SAMUEL ROGERS, Italy

Of all noises, I think music the least disagreeable.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,
in the Morning Chronicle

Music is the only sensual pleasure without vice.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Apothegms

O Music! sphere-descended maid,
Friend of pleasure, wisdom's aid!

WILLIAM COLLINS, The Passions

Names

What's in a name? That which we call a rose
By any other name would smell as sweet.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Romeo and Juliet

Nature

Nature is content with little; grace with less;
but lust with nothing.

MATTHEW HENRY, Genesis

Accuse not Nature; she hath done her part;
Do thou but thine.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

But who can paint

Like Nature? Can imagination boast,
Amid its gay creation, hues like hers?

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

Nature, exerting an unwearied power,
Forms, opens, and gives scent to every flower;
Spreads the fresh verdure of the field, and leads
The dancing Naiads through the dewy meads.

WILLIAM COWPER, Table Talk

Nothing is great but the inexhaustible wealth of nature.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Resources

Nature alone is antique and the oldest art a mushroom.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus

Nature and Nature's laws lay hid in night:
God said, 'Let Newton be!' and all was light.

ALEXANDER POPE,

Epitaph Intended for Sir Isaac Newton

Nature is God's, Art is man's instrument.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, A Wife

Nature is a mutable cloud, which is always and never the same.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, History

Nature, so far as in her lies,
Imitates God.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
On a Mourner

Nature is the art of God.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE,
Religio Medici

Nearness

A man's best things are nearest him,
Lie close about his feet.

LORD HOUGHTON, The Men of Old

Necessity

All things happen by necessity; in nature there is neither good nor bad.

BENEDICT SPINOZA

Need makes the old wife trot.

Proverb

Necessity is the mother of invention.

Proverb

Necessity does the work of courage.

GEORGE ELIOT, Romola

Night

Light thickens; and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood;
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
Whiles night's black agents to their prey do rouse.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

This dead of night, this silent hour of darkness,
Nature for rest ordain'd, and soft repose.

NICHOLAS ROWE, The Fair Penitent

Now sunk the sun; the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with sober grey;
Nature in silence bade the world repose.

THOMAS PARNELL

How like a widow in her weeds, the night,
Amid her glimmering tapers, silent sits!
How sorrowful, how desolate, she weeps
Perpetual dews, and saddens nature's scene.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

In sable pomp, with all her starry train,
The night resum'd her throne.

RICHARD GLOVER

How beautiful is night!
A dewy freshness fills the silent air;
No mist obscures, nor cloud, nor speck, nor stain
Breaks the serene of heaven.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, Thalaba

The night
Shows stars and women in a better light.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Night—the nurse of thoughts.

HENRY VAUGHAN, Daphnis

Nobility

Noble by birth, yet nobler by great deeds.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Tales of a Wayside Inn

Do noble things, not dream them, all day long.
CHARLES KINGSLEY, A Farewell

Nonsense

A little nonsense, now and then,
Is relished by the wisest men.

Unknown—old nursery rhyme

A careless song, with a little nonsense in it now and then, does not misbecome a monarch.

HORACE WALPOLE,
Letter to Sir Horace Mann

Nose

Lightly was her slender nose
Tip-tilted like the petal of a flower.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
Gareth and Lynette

Oaths

I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;
Who shuns not to break one will sure crack both.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Pericles

Obscurity

Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

THOMAS GRAY,
Elegy in a Country Churchyard

Observation

Let observation, with extensive view,
Survey mankind from China to Peru.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,
Vanity of Human Wishes

Rightly viewed, no meanest object is insignificant; all objects are as windows, through which the philosophic eye looks into Infinitude itself.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus

I pity the man who can travel from Dan to Beersheba, and cry, "'Tis all barren!"

LAURENCE STERNE, In the Street

Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel as ithers see us!

ROBERT BURNS, To a Louse

Men are born with two eyes, but with one tongue in order that they should see twice as much as they say.

CHARLES CALEB COLTON, Lacon

The difference between landscape and landscape is small; but there is a great difference between the beholders.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Nature

You must look into people as well as at them.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letters to his Son

Obstacles

Every path hath a puddle.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum

Obstinacy

An obstinate man does not hold opinions, but they hold him.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

Ocean

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue Ocean,—roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain:

Man marks the earth with ruin,—his control
Stops with the shore.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Offense

Who fears t'offend takes the first step to please.

COLLEY CIBBER, Love in a Riddle

Old Age (See also Aging and Youth)

What is the worst of woes that wait on age?
What stamps the wrinkle deeper on the brow?
To view each loved one blotted from life's page,
And be alone on earth as I am now.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

When our vices leave us, we flatter ourselves with the idea that we are leaving them.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

Men of age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Youth and Age

Crabbed age and youth
Cannot live together.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
The Passionate Pilgrim

Old age, a second child, by Nature curst
With more and greater evils than the first,
Weak, sickly, full of pains, in every breath
Railing at life, and yet afraid of death.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, Gotham

Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion;
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It

An old man's twice a child.

PHILIP MASSINGER, The Bashful Lover

Whatever poet, orator or sage
May say of it; old age is still old age.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Morituri Salutamus

Forty is the old age of youth, fifty is the youth of old age.

VICTOR HUGO

See how the world its veterans rewards!
A youth of frolics, an old age of cards.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

Opinion

New opinions are always suspected, and usually opposed, without any other reason, but because they are not already common.

JOHN LOCKE,
An Essay concerning Human Understanding

Remember that all things are only opinion and that it is in your power to think as you please.

MARCUS AURELIUS

The absurd man is he who never changes his opinions.

AUGUSTE BARTHÉLEMY

Human nature causes us to be dependent on other people's opinion in a way completely out of proportion to its value.

ARTHUR SCHOPENHAUER, On Women

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

Men are never so good or so bad as their opinions.

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH,
Ethical Philosophy

The man who never alters his opinion is like standing water, and breeds reptiles of the mind.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Proverbs of Hell

Opportunity

There is an hour in each man's life appointed
To make his happiness if then he seize it.

FLETCHER AND MASSINGER,
The Custom of the Country

Jupiter himself cannot bring back lost opportunity.

PHAEDRUS

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds.

FRANCIS BACON,
Essays: Of Ceremonies and Respects

Gather ye rose-buds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying,
And this same flower, that smiles today,
Tomorrow will be dying.

ROBERT HERRICK,
To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time

When the sunne shineth, make hay.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

Age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Morituri Salutamus

A little fire is quickly trodden out;
Which, being suffered, rivers cannot quench.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Henry VI

Strike whilst the iron is hot.

JOHN WEBSTER, Westward Ho

It is good to make hay while the sun shines.

Proverb

Every man has a goose that lays golden eggs, if he only knew it.

Proverb

Oppression

Press not a falling man too far!

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
King Henry VIII

Optimism

Men in general are fain to believe that which they wish to be true.

JULIUS CAESAR

Order

The heavens themselves, the planets and this centre,

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Troilus and Cressida

Order is Heaven's first law.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

Originality

There is nothing new under the sun.

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY,
Essay on the Diary of Madame D'Arblay

Oysters

Oysters are not good in a month that hath not an R in it.

Proverb

Pain

Pain pays the income of each precious thing.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Rape of Lucrece

A man deep-wounded may feel too much pain
To feel much anger.

GEORGE ELIOT, Spanish Gypsy

Pain is no longer pain when it is past.

MARGARET J. PRESTON, Nature's Lesson

Parenthood

Where yet was ever found a mother
Who'd give her booby for another?

JOHN GAY,
The Mother, the Nurse and the Fairy

A mother is a mother still,
The holiest thing alive.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,
The Three Graves

It is a wise father that knows his own child.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Merchant of Venice

Parting

Such partings break the heart they fondly hope to heal.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

So sweetly she bade me adieu,
I thought she bade me return.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE, A Pastoral

Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sorrow.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Romeo and Juliet

Farewell!

For in that word,—that fatal word,—howe'er
We promise—hope—believe,—there breathes despair.

LORD BYRON, The Corsair

Farewell—Farewell! a word that must be, and hath been:
A sound which makes us linger,—yet—farewell.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Stand not upon the order of your going
But go at once.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

They who go
Feel not the pain of parting; it is they
Who stay behind that suffer.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Michael Angelo

The joys of meeting pay the pangs of absence;
Else who could bear it?

NICHOLAS ROWE, Tamerlane

My greatest grief is that I leave
No thing that claims a tear.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Past

Wondrous and awful are thy silent halls,
O kingdom of the past!
There lie the bygone ages in their palls,
Guarded by shadows vast.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, To the Past

Patience

Patience, that blending of moral courage with physical timidity.

THOMAS HARDY,
Tess of the D'Urbervilles

All things come to him who will but wait.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Tales of a Wayside Inn

Arm the obdured breast

With stubborn patience as with triple steel.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

Beware the fury of a patient man.

JOHN DRYDEN, Absalom and Achitophel

How poor are they, that have not patience!
What wound did ever heal, but by degrees?

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Othello

Patriotism (See also Americanism)

The age of virtuous politics is past,
And we are deep in that of cold pretence.
Patriots are grown too shrewd to be sincere:
And we too wise to trust them.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Task

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said
This is my own, my native land?

SIR WALTER SCOTT,
The Lay of the Last Minstrel

Peace

Two things I have found that are lovely,
Though most things are sullen and grey;
One: Peace—but what mortal has found him,
and
Passion—but when would he stay?

LAURENCE HOPE,
The Complete Love Lyrics

But the real and lasting victories are those of peace, and not of war.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Worship

The arts of peace are great,
And no less glorious than those of war.

WILLIAM BLAKE, King Edward III

Peace hath her victories,
No less renowned than war.

JOHN MILTON,
Sonnet: To the Lord General Cromwell

Persistence

Attempt the end, and never stand to doubt;
Nothing's so hard but search will find it out.

RICHARD LOVELACE,
Seek and Find

Persuasion

Few are open to conviction, but the majority of men to persuasion.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Pity

Pity speaks to grief
More sweetly than a band of instruments.

BARRY CORNWALL,
The Florentine Party

Plans

The best laid schemes of mice and men
Gang aft a-gley;
And leave us naught but grief and pain
For promised joy.

ROBERT BURNS, To a Mouse

Pleasure

Follow pleasure, and then will pleasure flee;
Flee pleasure, and pleasure will follow thee.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

Pleasures are like poppies spread—
You seize the flower, its bloom is shed.

ROBERT BURNS, Tam o' Shanter

Pleasure that comes unlook'd for is thrice welcome.

SAMUEL ROGERS, Italy, An Interview

Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

JOHN DRYDEN, Alexander's Feast

Let us have wine and women, mirth and laughter;
Sermons and soda-water the day after.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Pleasure is very seldom found where it is sought.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, in The Rambler

Rarity enhances pleasures.

JUVENAL

To really enjoy pleasures you must know how to leave them.

VOLTAIRE

Pleasure is more powerful than all fear of the penalty.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Plenty

Plenty corrupts the melody.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,
The Blackbird

Plenty is the child of peace.

WILLIAM PRYNNE, Histriomastix

Poetry

To get at the eternal strength of things,
And fearlessly to make strong songs of it,
Is, to my mind, the mission of that man
The World would call a poet.

EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON, *Octaves*¹

Poetry is the child of nature, which, regulated and made beautiful by art, presenteth the most harmonious of all other compositions.

JAMES SHIRLEY,
Preface to Beaumont and Fletcher

Poetry, the queen of arts.

THOMAS SPRAT,

Ode upon the Poems of Abraham Cowley

There is a pleasure in poetic pains
Which only poets know.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Task

Possession

What we have, we have;
What we spent, we had;
What we left, we lost.

Epitaph of Edward Courtenay

One bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.
Proverb

The thing possessed is not the thing it seems.

SAMUEL DANIEL,
The History of the Civil Wars

No man can lose what he never had.

ISAAC WALTON, The Compleat Angler

Better one byrde in hand than ten in the wood.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

Them as ha' never had a cushion don't miss it.

GEORGE ELIOT, Adam Bede

Postponement

Be wise today; 'tis madness to defer.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Defer not till tomorrow to be wise:
Tomorrow's sun to thee may never rise.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, Letter to Cobham

Never leave that till tomorrow which you can do today.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

Never do today what you can do as well tomorrow; because something may occur to make you regret your premature action.

AARON BURR, in a letter

By the street of By-and-By
One comes to the house of never.

Proverb

Poverty

Poverty is no disgrace to a man, but it is confidently inconvenient.

SYDNEY SMITH, Lady Holland

Poverty is a bully if you are afraid of her, or truckle to her. Poverty is good-natured if you meet her like a man.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, Philip

Poverty makes some humble, but more malignant.

BULWER-LYTTON, Eugene Aram

¹From The Children of the Night, published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Poverty, the reward of honest fools.

COLLEY CIBBER, Richard III

Power

Power is the grim idol that the world adores.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Political Essays

Practice

Practice what you preach.

EDWARD YOUNG, Love of Fame

An ounce of practice is worth a pound of preaching.

Proverb

Praise

The love of praise, howe'er concealed by art,
Reigns more or less, and glows in every heart.

EDWARD YOUNG, Love of Fame

Say not that she did well or ill,
Only, "She did her best."

DINAH MARIA CRAIK, Poems

As a rule we only praise in order to be praised.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

Do you wish people to speak well of you?
Don't yourself.

BLAISE PASCAL, Pensées

The art of praising is the beginning of the art of pleasing.

VOLTAIRE, La Pucelle

And those that paint them truest praise them most.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Campaign

Prayer

I was not born for courts or great affairs;
I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers.

ALEXANDER POPE,

Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot

Prayer is the spirit speaking truth to Truth.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things, both great and small.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,

The Ancient Mariner

He prayeth well who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,

The Ancient Mariner

Precaution

A stitch in time saves nine.

Proverb

Look ere ye leape.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

It is too late to shutte the stable door when the steede is stolne.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues

Look before you ere you leap;
For as you sow y'are like to reap.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras

Preference

What's one man's poison, signor,
Is another's meat or drink.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER,

Love's Cure

Every one to his taste.

Proverb

Prejudice

All seems infected that the infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundiced eye.

ALEXANDER POPE,

Essay on Criticism

Preparedness

All things are ready, if our minds be so.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry V

A wise man in time of peace prepares for war.

HORACE, Satires

Present

The present is never a happy state to any human being.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,

in Boswell's Life of Johnson

One today is worth two tomorrows.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,

Poor Richard's Almanac

Pride

Pride goeth before destruction,
And an haughty spirit before a fall.

Proverbs

Pride,
Howe'er disguised in its own majesty,
Is littleness.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

Poems Written in Youth

Pride that dines on vanity sups on contempt.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,

Poor Richard's Almanac

Procrastination

Procrastination is the thief of time.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Profit

No one was ever ruined by taking a profit.
Stock Exchange Saying

Ill blows the wind that profits nobody.
 WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI

Progress

Necessity invented stools,
 Convenience next suggested elbow-chairs,
 And luxury the accomplish'd sofa last.
 WILLIAM COWPER, The Task

Progress is
 The law of life; man is not man as yet.
 ROBERT BROWNING, Paracelsus

Progress is the development of order.
 AUGUSTE COMTE

All things, going upwards or downwards, are in a perpetual flux.
 HERACLITUS

Promises

Men apt to promise are apt to forget.
Proverb

They promise mountains, but perform molehills.
 CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON,
Ploughman's Pictures

Quarreling

Quarrels would not last long if the fault was only on one side.
 LA ROCHEFOUCAULD

When one will not, two cannot quarrel.
Proverb

Quiet

Quiet to quick bosoms is a hell.
 LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

Quotations

He ranged his tropes and preached up patience,
 Backed his opinions with Quotations.
 MATTHEW PRIOR,
Paulo Purganti and His Wife

The wisdom of the wise and the experience of ages may be preserved by quotations.

ISAAC D'ISRAELI,
Curiosities of Literature

Rain

The clouds consign their treasures to the fields,
 And softly shaking on the dimpled pool
 Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow,
 In large effusion, o'er the freshen'd world.
 JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

Reality

Consult the dead upon the things that were,
 But the living only on things that are.
 HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Golden Legend

Few men have imagination enough for the truth of reality.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Reason

A man's vanity tells him what is honour, a man's conscience what is justice.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, Imaginary Conversations

Every why hath a wherefore.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
The Comedy of Errors

Passion and prejudice govern the world; only under the name of reason.

JOHN WESLEY,
Letter to Joseph Benson

The sublime and the ridiculous are often so nearly related, that it is difficult to class them separately.
 One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous, and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again.

THOMAS PAINE, Age of Reason

When a man has not a good reason for doing a thing, he has one good reason for letting it alone.

REV. THOMAS SCOTT,
Commentary on the Bible

Reconciliation

Never can true reconciliation grow
 Where wounds of deadly hate have pierc'd so deep.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

Reflection

The world is a looking-glass, and gives back to every man the reflection of his own face.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY,
Vanity Fair

Reform

A reform is a correction of abuses: a revolution is a transfer of power.

EDWARD BULWER-LYTTON,
Speech in the House of Commons

Every reform, no matter how necessary, will by weak minds be carried to an excess, which will itself need reforming.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,
Biographia Literaria

Regret

Be early what, if you are not, you will, when it is too late, wish you had been.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

For of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: "It might have been!"

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER, Maud Muller

Rejoicing

It's a poor heart that never rejoices.

Proverb—CHARLES DICKENS,
Barnaby Rudge

Relationship

Almost all of our sorrows spring out of our relations with other people.

ARTHUR SCHOPENHAUER

Religion

The writers against religion, whilst they oppose every system, are wisely careful never to set up any of their own.

EDMUND BURKE,
A Vindication of Natural Society

To be of no church is dangerous. Religion, of which the rewards are distant, and which is animated only by Faith and Hope, will glide by degrees out of the mind, unless it be invigorated and reimpresed by external ordinances, by stated calls to worship, and the salutary influence of example.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Life of Milton

Atheism is rather in the lip than in the heart of man.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays of Atheism

There is no greater disagreement than one about Religion.

MONTANUS, in Micah

There is only one religion, though there are a hundred versions of it.

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW

By night an atheist half believes a God.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

Nobody can deny but that religion is a comfort to the distressed, a cordial to the sick, and sometimes a restraint on the wicked.

LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU,
Letter to the Countess of Bute

Forgetfulness of all religion leads to the forgetfulness of the duties of man.

JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU, Emile

Man is by his constitution a religious animal.

EDMUND BURKE,
Reflections on the Revolution in France

Every man has his religion. We differ about trimming.

JOHN SELDEN

The practice of true Religion consists principally in two great branches, giving honor to God, and doing good to men.

SAMUEL CLARKE, Sermons

Remedy

Extreme remedies are very appropriate for extreme diseases.

HIPPOCRATES, Aphorisms

Feed a cold and starve a fever.

Proverb

The best physicians are, Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet, and Dr. Merryman.

SYDNEY SMITH

Remembrance

How sharp the pang of this remembrance is!

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest

Repentance

Repentance is the weight of indigest meals eat yesterday.

GEORGE ELIOT, Spanish Gypsy

Reputation

But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him
And makes me poor indeed.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Othello

At every word a reputation dies.

ALEXANDER POPE, The Rape of the Lock

It is not as thy mother says, but as thy neighbors say.

Proverb

He that hath an ill name is half hang'd, ye know.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

A man's reputation is something like his coat, there is certain chemicals that will take the stains and greese spots out of it, but it always has a second-handed kind of a look, and generally smells strong of the chemicals.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

'Tis thus that on the choice of friends
Our good or evil name depends.

JOHN GAY, Fables

Resignation

What's gone and what's past help
Should be past grief.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, A Winter's Tale

Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead Past bury its Dead!

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
A Psalm of Life

A great man commands the affections of the people. A prudent man does not complain when he has lost them.

JUNIUS, Letters

Things without all remedy
Should be without regard; what's done is done.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Othello

Resourcefulness

Fight fire with fire, and craft with craft.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Cobbler of Hagenau

If the mountain will not come to Mohammed,
Mohammed will go to the mountain.

MOHAMMED

The mouse that always trusts to one poor hole
Can never be a mouse of any soul.

ALEXANDER POPE, The Wife of Bath

Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that's put to use more gold begets.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Venus and Adonis

Revenge

Revenge is a kind of wild justice.

FRANCIS BACON, Revenge

Revenge is a confession of pain.

SENECA, De Ira

Revenge, at first though sweet,
Bitter ere long back on itself recoils.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

Revenge is profitable, gratitude is expensive.

EDWARD GIBBON,
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire

Sweet is revenge—especially to women.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Reward

The reward of a thing well done is to have done it.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
New England Reformers

How blest is he who crowns, in shades like these,
A youth of labour with an age of ease.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village

As you brew, so shall you bake.

Proverb

Ridicule

I defy the wisest man in the world to turn a truly good action into ridicule.

HENRY FIELDING, Joseph Andrews

Of all the griefs that harass the distressed,
Sure the most bitter is a scornful jest.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, London

Ridicule is a weak weapon, when levelled at a strong mind;
But common men are cowards and dread an empty laugh.

MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER,
Proverbial Philosophy of Ridicule

Right and Wrong

It is the greatest good to the greatest number which is the measure of right or wrong.

JEREMY BENTHAM, Works

He who discusses is in the right, he who disputes is in the wrong.

CLAUDE DE RULHIÈRE, Disputes

Routine

We all of us live too much in a circle.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sybil

Rumor

That talkative maiden, Rumour.

GEORGE ELIOT, Felix Holt

Satire

Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way, if not the best,
To tell men freely of their foulest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts.

DRYDEN AND MULGRAVE,
Essay on Satire

Satire's power: 'tis her corrective part
To calm the wild disorders of the heart,
To point the arduous height where glory lies,
And teaches mad Ambition to be wise.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Satire

Satire should, like a polished razor keen,
Wound with a touch that's scarcely felt or seen.

LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU,
To the Imitator of the First Satire of Horace

Scepticism

Scepticism is slow suicide.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Self-Reliance

A wise scepticism is the first attribute of a good critic.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, Among My Books

Science

Science is organized knowledge.

HERBERT SPENCER, Education

Sea

The Sea, beloved by a thousand ships,
Is maiden ever, and fresh and free.
Ah, for the touch of her cool green lips,
Carry me out to Sea!

LAURENCE HOPE,
*The Complete Love Lyrics*¹

Self-Control

And mistress of herself,
though china fall.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

If you cannot keep your own counsel, how can you expect another person to keep it.

Proverb

Self-Defense

The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Henry VI

Self-defense is nature's eldest law.

JOHN DRYDEN, Absalom and Achitophel

Self-Reliance

God helps them that help themselves.

Proverb

There is no dependence that can be sure but a dependence upon one's self.

JOHN GAY, Letter to Swift

And all your fortune lies beneath your hat.

JOHN OLDHAM, To a Friend

What weapons has the lion but himself?

JOHN KEATS, King Stephen

Self-Respect

It is necessary for the happiness of man that he be mentally faithful to himself.

THOMAS PAINE, The Age of Reason

Sense of Humor

The man who cannot laugh is not only fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils; but his whole life is already a treason and a stratagem.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus

A sense of humour sharp enough to show a man his own absurdities will keep him from the commission of all sins, or nearly all, except those that are worth committing.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Life and Habit

A mind is not completely well organized that is deficient in a sense of humour.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,
Table Talk

Senses

Sight has to do with the understanding; hearing with reason; smell with memory. Touch and taste are realistic and depend on contact; they have no ideal side.

ARTHUR SCHOPENHAUER,
Psychological Observations

Sentimentalism

The heart has reasons of which reason has no knowledge.

BLAISE PASCAL, Pensées

Silence

And I oft have heard defended
Little said is soonest mended.

GEORGE WITHER, The Shepherd's Hunting

Wise men say nothing in dangerous times.

JOHN SELDEN, Table Talk

Be checked for silence
But never tax'd for speech.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
All's Well that Ends Well

Silence in woman is like speech in man.

BEN JONSON, Silent Woman

Great joys, like griefs, are silent.

SHACKERLEY MARMION,
Holland's Leaguer

Silence gives consent.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH,
The Good-Natured Man

Silence is deep as Eternity; speech is shallow as Time.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Sir Walter Scott

Macaulay is like a book in breeches. . . . He has occasional flashes of silence, that make his conversation perfectly delightful.

SYDNEY SMITH, Lady Holland's Memoir

Be silent, or say something better than silence.

Proverb

A fool when he is silent is counted wise.

Proverb

Silence is a still noise.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Similarity

Birds of a feather will fly together.

Proverb

Like will to like.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs

¹Copyright 1905-1933 by Malcolm J. J. S. Nicolson. Reprinted by permission of Dodd, Mead & Company.

Sin

Give me your love for a day, a night, an hour;
If the wages of sin are Death I am willing to pay.

LAURENCE HOPE,
*The Complete Love Lyrics*¹

Commit

The oldest sins the newest kind of ways.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Henry IV

He that falls into sin is a man; that grieves at it is a saint; that boasteth of it is a devil.

THOMAS FULLER,
Holy and Profane States

The way to Hell's a seeming Heav'n.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblemes

No vice is complete by itself (i.e., one vice leads to another).

SENECA

Sincerity

Every man alone is sincere; at the entrance of a second person hypocrisy begins.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Friendship

Sky

The silence that is in the starry sky.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH,
Song at the Feast of Brougham Castle

Sleep

Blessings on him who invented sleep, the mantle that covers all human thoughts, the food that appeases hunger, the drink that quenches thirst, the fire that warms cold, the cold that moderates heat, and lastly, the general coin that purchases all things, the balance and weight that equals the shepherd with the king, and the simple with the wise.

MIGUEL DE CERVANTES, Don Quixote

O sleep! it is a gentle thing,
Beloved from pole to pole.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE,
The Ancient Mariner

O bed! bed! delicious bed!
That heaven upon earth to the weary head!

THOMAS HOOD,
Miss Kilmansegg: Her Dream

Come, Sleep; O Sleep! the certain knot of peace,
The baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe,
The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
Th' indifferent judge between the high and low.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Astrophel and Stella

Thou has been called, O sleep! the friend of Woe;
But 'tis the happy that have called thee so.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, The Curse of Kehama

Society

Society is now one polished horde,
Formed of two mighty tribes, the Bores and Bored.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Society is a masked ball, where every one hides his real character, and reveals it by hiding.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Worship

Solitude

In solitude where we are least alone.

LORD BYRON,
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

I was never less alone than when by myself.

EDWARD GIBBON, Memoirs

For solitude sometimes is best society.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

That inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH,
I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud

One can be instructed in society, one is inspired only in solitude.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Conversation enriches the understanding, but solitude is the school of genius.

EDWARD GIBBON

Sorrow (See also Grief and Despair)

Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus

The busy have no time for tears.

LORD BYRON, The Two Foscari

Great Sorrows cannot speak.

JOHN DONNE, Elegy on Death

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions!

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Speculation

All's to be fear'd where all is to be gain'd.

LORD BYRON, Werner

Speech

And men talk only to conceal the mind.

EDWARD YOUNG, Love of Fame

The true use of speech is not so much to express our wants as to conceal them.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Bee

¹Copyright 1905-1933 by Malcolm J. J. S. Nicolson. Reprinted by permission of Dodd, Mead & Company.

Discretion of speech is more than eloquence.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Discourse

Words are the only things that last forever.

WILLIAM HAZLITT,

Table-Talk: On Thought and Action

Words are like leaves; and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Blessed is the man who, having nothing to say, abstains from giving us wordy evidence of the fact.

GEORGE ELIOT, Theophrastus Such

What is not in a man cannot come out of him surely.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

First among the evidences of an education I name correctness and precision in the use of the mother tongue.

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER

Language most shows a man; speak, that I may see you.

BEN JONSON, Explorata

Talking is one of the fine arts . . . and its fluent harmonies may be spoiled by the intrusion of a single harsh note.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

His words, like so many nimble and airy servants, trip about him at command.

JOHN MILTON, Apology for Smectymnuus

Drawing is speaking to the eye; talking is painting to the ear.

JOSEPH JOUBERT

And it is so plain to me that eloquence, like swimming, is an art which all men might learn, though so few do.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Mend your speech a little, lest it may mar your fortunes.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Lear

You may blot what is written, but the spoken word can never be recalled.

HORACE

God has given us tongues so that we may say something pleasant to our fellow men.

HEINRICH HEINE, Confessions

Accent is the soul of speech, it gives it feeling and truth.

JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU, Emile

Spelling

I spell by ear altogether, spelling a word the way it sounds, which frequently is much simpler than the way these academic sharps put it.

IRVIN S. COBB, *Exit Laughing*¹

Spring

Come, gentle Spring! ethereal mildness, come!

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

First, lusty spring, all dight in leaves of flowers
That freshly budded, and new blossoms did wear
In which a thousand birds had built their bowers.

EDMUND SPENSER, Faerie Queene

Hail, bounteous May, that dost inspire

Mirth, youth, and warm desire:

Woods and groves are of thy dressing,

Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing.

JOHN MILTON, On May Morning

In these green days

Reviving sickness lifts her languid head;

Life flows afresh and young-ey'd health exalts

The whole creation round.

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

O Spring! of hope, and love, and youth, and gladness,

Wind-winged emblem! brightest, best, and fairest
Whence comest thou?

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY

Wide flush the fields: the softening air is balm;
Echo the mountains round; the forest smiles;
And every sense, and every heart, is joy.

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

Stars

There they stand,

Shining in order like a living hymn

Written in light.

NATHANIEL PARKER WILLIS, Poems

Ye stars, that are the poetry of heaven.

LORD BYRON,

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage

The Sky

Spreads like an ocean hung on high

Bespangled with those isles of light

So wildly, spiritually bright.

LORD BYRON, Siege of Corinth

Stealth

Stolen waters are sweet,

And bread eaten in secret is pleasant.

Proverbs

Strangers

The largest part of mankind are nowhere greater strangers than at home.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE

Strength

O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Measure for Measure

Subtlety

A beauty masked, like the sun in eclipse,
Gathers together more gazers than if it shined out.

WILLIAM WYCHERLEY, The Country Wife

Success (See also Fame)

The secret of success is constancy to purpose.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI,
Speech at the Crystal Palace

They never fail who die
In a great cause.

LORD BYRON, Marino Faliero

Suicide

Self-destruction is the effect of cowardice, in the highest extreme.

DANIEL DEFOE, An Essay Upon Projects

Suitability

Suit the action to the word, the word to the action.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

Summer

Now comes thy glory in the summer months,
With light and heat refulgent.

JAMES THOMSON

'Twas noon; and every orange-bud
Hung languid o'er the crystal flood,
Faint as the lids of maiden eyes
Beneath a lover's burning sighs!

CLEMENT CLARK MOORE

The Spring's gay promise melted into thee,
Fair Summer! and thy gentle reign is here;
Thy emerald robes are on each leafy tree;
In the blue sky thy voice is rich and clear.

WILLIS GAYLORD CLARK

Thus gazing on thy void and sapphire sky,
O, Summer! in my inmost soul arise
Uplifted thoughts to which the woods reply.

WILLIS GAYLORD CLARK

Sun

Pleasant the sun,
When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,
Glistering with dew.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

For like a god thou art, and on thy way
Of glory sheddest, with benignant ray,
Beauty and life, and joyance from above.

ROBERT SOUTHEY

There was not, on that day, a speck to stain
The azure heaven; the blessed sun alone,
In unapproachable divinity,
Career'd, rejoicing in his field of light.

ROBERT SOUTHEY

I marvel not, O sun! that unto thee,
In adoration man should bow the knee,
And pour the prayer of mingled awe and love.

ROBERT SOUTHEY

Blest power of sunshine! genial Day,
What balm, what life is in thy ray!
To feel thee is such real bliss.

THOMAS MOORE, Lalla Rookh

Centre of light and energy! thy way
Is through the unknown void; thou hast thy throne,
Morning and evening, and the close of day,
Far in the blue, untended, and alone.

JAMES GATES PERCIVAL, Poems

And we watch it down the west,
As it early sings to rest;
Then, with sorrow at our hearts,
Sigh--"How soon the sun departs!"

CAROLINE MAY

Superiority

Among the blind the one-eyed is a king.

Proverb

Never seem wiser, nor more learned, then the people you are with.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

Be wiser than other people if you can; but do not tell them so.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

How much a dunce that has been sent to roam
Excels a dunce that has been kept at home.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Progress of Error

Superstition

Superstition is the religion of feeble minds.

EDMUND BURKE,
Reflections on the Revolution in France

Suspicion

Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;
The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI

He that hides treasure
Imagines every one thinks of that place.

THOMAS MIDDLETON, The Old Law

Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Measure for Measure

Sympathy

The drying up a single tear has more of honest fame, than shedding seas of gore.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Tact

Reprove thy friend privately,
Commend him publicly.

Proverb

Talent

Talent is that which is in a man's power; genius is that in whose power a man is.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, Among My Books

A really great talent finds its happiness in execution.

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE

Talking

A bird is known by its note, and a man by his talk.

Proverb

Temperament

We boil at different degrees.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Society and Solitude: Eloquence

Temptation

'The only way to get rid of temptation is to yield to it.

OSCAR WILDE, Picture of Dorian Gray

When a man is tempted to do a tempting thing, he can find a hundred ingenious reasons for gratifying his liking.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY,
Pendennis

No man is matriculated to the art of life till he has been well tempted.

GEORGE ELIOT, Romola

Thinking

There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

A moment's thinking is an hour in words.

THOMAS HOOD, Hero and Leander

Thoroughness

Whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well.

LORD CHESTERFIELD,
Letter to His Godson

Carry on every enterprise as if all depended on the success of it.

RICHELIEU

Thought

Thought alone is eternal.

OWEN MEREDITH, Lucile

Thought is the property of him who can entertain it, and of him who can adequately place it.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON,
Representative Men: Shakespeare

They are never alone that are accompanied with noble thoughts.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Arcadia

Thrift

A penny saved is a penny gained.

Proverb

For age and want, save while you may;
No morning sun lasts a whole day.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

Thrift is too late at the bottom of the purse.

SENECA

Time

Time is a great legalizer, even in the field of morals.

HENRY L. MENCKEN, *A Book of Prefaces*¹

It (the value of time) is in everybody's mouth, but in few people's practice.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

Our todays and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Builders

Time wasted is existence; used is life.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts

The inaudible and noiseless foot of Time.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
All's Well that Ends Well

Sweet childish days, that were as long
As twenty days are now.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH,
To a Butterfly

I recommend you to take care of the minutes for the hours will take care of themselves.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters to His Son

Catch, then, O catch the transient hour;
Improve each moment as it flies;
Life's a short Summer, man a flower;
He dies,—alas! how soon he dies!

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Winter

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN,
Poor Richard's Almanac

Time, who in the twilight comes to mend
All the fantastic day's caprice.

ROBERT BROWNING, Strafford

Unhappy is he who trusts only to time for his happiness.

VOLTAIRE

Trifles

Think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year,
And trifles life.

EDWARD YOUNG, Love of Fame

Trivia

At every trifle scorn to take offence;
That always shows great pride or little sense.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Those who occupy their minds too much with small matters generally become incapable of great.

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes

A man must be well off who is irritated by trifles, for in misfortune trifles are not felt.

ARTHUR SCHOPENHAUER

Troubles

I never knew any man in my life who could not bear another's misfortunes perfectly like a Christian.

ALEXANDER POPE,
Thoughts on Various Subjects

Every one can master a grief but he that has it.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Much Ado about Nothing

For there was never yet philosopher
That could endure the toothache patiently.

Truth

Truth is the highest thing that man may keep.

GEOFFREY CHAUCER,
The Frankeleyn's Tale

Children and fools speak the truth.

Proverb

Truth from his lips prevailed with double sway,
And fools who came to scoff remained to pray.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again:
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among his worshippers.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT,
The Battle-Field

Truth is as impossible to be soiled by any outward touch as the sunbeam

JOHN MILTON,
The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce

Truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
Measure for Measure

Some falsehood mingles with all truth.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
The Golden Legend

This above all: to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet

'Tis not enough your counsel still be true;
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Criticism

Beauty is truth, truth beauty,—that is all
Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.

JOHN KEATS, Ode on a Grecian Urn

Children and fooles speake true.

JOHN LYLY, Endymion

Errors, like straws, upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls, must dive below.

JOHN DRYDEN, All For Love

It is strange, but true; for truth is always strange;
Stranger than fiction.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony, not understood;
All partial evil, Universal Good;
And, spite of pride, in erring reason's spite,
One truth is clear, Whatever is, is right.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

No pleasure is comparable to the Standing upon the vantage-ground of truth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essay on Truth

It is the customary fate of new truths to begin as heresies and to end as superstitions.

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY,
Science and Culture

I do not know what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea-shore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble, or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.

ISAAC NEWTON,
in Brewster's Memoirs of Newton

It is more from carelessness about truth than from intentional lying, that there is so much falsehood in the world.

SAMUEL JOHNSON to JAMES BOSWELL

Without courage there cannot be truth, and without truth there can be no other virtue.

SIR WALTER SCOTT

It often requires more bravery to tell the simple truth than it does to win a battle.

JOSH BILLINGS (HENRY WHEELER SHAW)

Uncertainty

Many things fall out between the cup and the lip.
Proverb

Lest men suspect your tale untrue,
Keep probability in view.

Valuation

Forbidden wares sell twice as dear.

DENHAM, Natura Naturalia

Oh, God! that bread should be so dear,
And flesh and blood so cheap!

THOMAS HOOD, The Song of the Shirt

A thing you don't want is dear at any price.

Proverb

A crown, if it hurt us, is hardly worth wearing.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Fcstus

Variety

A man who can do everything can do nothing.
Proverb

The great source of pleasure is variety.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Life of Butler

Vary everything, except your loves.

VOLTAIRE

Versatility

Who can be wise, amazed, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth

Vice

I have found that one big vice in a man is apt to keep out a great many smaller ones.

FRANCIS BRET HARTE,

Two Men of Sandy Bar

Virtue

And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm.
HORACE, Odes, translated by Dryden

Why to true merit should they have regard?
They know that virtue is its own reward.

JOHN GAY, Epistle to Methuen

Wants

A man never feels the want of what it never occurs to him to ask for.

ARTHUR SCHOPENHAUER

War (See also Americanism)

The arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry IV

War's a brain-spattering, windpipe-slitting art,
Unless her cause by right be sanctified.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan

Wars are to be undertaken in order that it may be possible to live in peace without molestation.

CICERO, De Officiis

War is just to those to whom war is necessary.

TITUS LIVIUS, History

For what can war but endless war still breed?

JOHN MILTON, Sonnets: To Lord Fairfax

Worse than war is the fear of war.

SENECA, Thyestes

War should be long in preparing in order that you may conquer the more quickly.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY, Festus

Winter

See, winter comes to rule the varied year,
Sullen and sad, with all his rising train;
Vapours, and clouds and storms.

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

Let winter come! let polar spirits sweep
The darkening world and tempest-troubled deep Though boundless snows the wither'd heath deform.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Pleasures of Hope

Lastly came winter, clothed all in frieze,
Chattering his teeth for cold that did him chill;
Whilst on his hoary beard his breath did freeze.

EDMUND SPENSER, Faerie Queene

And pale concluding winter comes at last,
And shuts the scene.

JAMES THOMSON, The Seasons

Wisdom

Some are wise, and some are otherwise.

Proverb

To know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom.

JOHN MILTON, Paradise Lost

What is it to be wise?
'Tis but to know how little can be known;
To see all other's faults, and feel our own.

ALEXANDER POPE, Essay on Man

And he is oft the wisest man,
Who is not wise at all.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH,
The Oak and the Broom

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,
Ride more than thou goest.

Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
The Passionate Pilgrim

My only books
Were women's looks,
And folly's all they've taught me.

THOMAS MOORE, Irish Melodies

There are three classes into which all elderly women that I ever knew were to be divided: first, that dear old soul; second, that old woman;
third, that old witch.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE, Table Talk

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, King Lear

Sir, a woman preaching is like a dog's walking on his hind legs. It is not done well; but you are surprised to find it done at all.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,
in Boswell's Life of Johnson

Let men say whate'er they will,
Woman, woman, rules them still.

ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, The Sultan

She's beautiful, and therefore to be wooed;
She is a woman; therefore to be won.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI

The happiest women, like the happiest nations, have no history.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Mill on the Floss

A mill and a woman are always in want of something.

Proverb

A mill, a clock, and a woman, always want mending.

Proverb

If she be not so to me,
What care I how fair she be?

GEORGE WITHER,
The Shepherd's Resolution

Such, Polly! are your sex—part truth, part fiction;
Some thought, much whim, and all a contradiction.

RICHARD SAVAGE, Verses to a Young Lady

She who ne'er answers till a husband cools,
Or, if she rules him, never shows she rules.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays

A beautiful woman is the "hell" of the soul, the "purgatory" of the purse, and the "paradise" of the eyes.

FONTENELLE

Run if you like, but try to keep your breath;
Work like a man, but don't be worked to death.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, A Rhymed Lesson

A woman's work, grave sirs, is never done.

From a poem read by LAURENCE EUSDEN
at a Cambridge Commencement

Labor makes us insensible to sorrow.

CICERO

Life gives nothing to mortals except with great labor.

HORACE

Labor is often the father of pleasure.

VOLTAIRE, Discours

Labor has a bitter root but a sweet taste.

Proverb

World

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It

The world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those who feel.

HORACE WALPOLE,
Letter to Sir Horace Mann

It is a very good world to live in,
To lend, or to spend, or to give in;
But to beg or to borrow, or to get a man's own,
It is the very worst world that ever was known.

Attributed to the EARL OF ROCHESTER

Why, then the world's mine oyster,
Which I with sword will open.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,
The Merry Wives of Windsor

The history of the world is the judgment of the world.

sion, and I'll show you one of the rarest cases of freakish misapplication in the entire dime museum of human nature.

IRVIN S. COBB, *Exit Laughing*¹

No man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money.

SAMUEL JOHNSON,
in Boswell's Life of Johnson

Look, then, into thine heart, and write!

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,
Voices of the Night

Some write, confin'd by physic; some, by debt;
Some, for 'tis Sunday; some because 'tis wet;
Another writes because his father writ,
And proves himself a bastard by his wit.

EDWARD YOUNG, Epistle to Mr. Pope

'Tis pleasant, sure, to see one's name in print;
A book's a book although there's nothing in't.

LORD BYRON,
English Bards and Scotch Reviewers

Talent alone cannot make a writer. There must be a man behind the book.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, On Goethe

Beneath the rule of men entirely great,
The pen is mightier than the sword.

BULWER-LYTTON, Richelieu

Most wretched men

DICTIONARY OF CLASSICAL MYTHOLOGY

A KNOWLEDGE OF THE CLASSICS and an acquaintance with the imaginary characters, places, and incidents of ancient mythology which have been such an inspiring influence to writers of all ages add greatly to one's enjoyment of literature, art, and conversation. Few people outside literary and educational pursuits have sufficient opportunity or leisure to acquire or keep up a knowledge of this particular branch of learning. It is important, therefore, to present in dictionary form the stories of gods, goddesses, heroes, and heroines of the old Grecian and Roman literature. It will lead to a better understanding of the countless references which are made from time to time in the literature of the day to classic subjects. It is a great wonderland of poesy and romance, and forms a realm all its own, the realm of antiquity's gods and demons and of prehistoric heroes.

Abderus, armor-bearer to Hercules. He was torn to pieces by the mares of Diomedes.

Absyrtus, a son of Aetes, king of Colchis, who was murdered by his sister Medea when she fled with Jason.

Acamas, son of Theseus and Phaedra, who went with Diomedes to demand Helen from the Trojans and afterward took part in the Trojan War.

Acantha, a nymph, loved by Apollo and transformed into the acanthus.

Acarnas and Amphoterus, sons of Alemaeon and Callirrhoe.

Acestes, king of Drepanum, who assisted Priam at Troy and after the war entertained Aeneas during his stay at Drepanum.

Achaei, the descendants of Achaeus, who constituted one of the chief divisions of the ancient Greeks.

Achaemenides, son of Adramastus, who was abandoned by Ulysses on the coast of Sicily and was later found by Aeneas.

Achates, a friend of Aeneas, known for his fidelity; whence the term fidus Achates.

Acheloides, the Sirens, daughters of Achelous.

Achelous, son of Oceanus and Tethys, god of the river Achelous in Epirus. Contending with Hercules for Dejanira, he changed himself into a serpent. Later, after Achelous had turned himself into an ox, Hercules broke one of his horns and defeated him.

Acheron, a son of Ceres, who was changed into a river in Tartarus for supplying the Titans with water in their battle with the gods. Over this river Charon ferried the souls of the dead.

Acherusia, a lake near Memphis, said to have been connected with the lower world. Across this lake the bodies of the dead were ferried by Charon.

Achilles, most famous of the Greek heroes that fought at Troy, son of Peleus and Thetis. When an infant, he was plunged by his mother into the Styx and made invulnerable except in the heel, by which she held him. During the Trojan War he quarreled with Agamemnon about Briseis and for a time refrained from fighting. But when his friend Patroclus was killed, he rejoined his comrades and slew Hector at the Scaean Gate. Ultimately Achilles himself was slain, wounded by an arrow in his vulnerable heel.

Achillides, Pyrrhus, son of Achilles.

Acis, a Sicilian shepherd, son of Faunus and Simaethis, who fell in love with the sea-nymph Galatea. Jealous of her love, the Cyclops Polyphemus crushed Acis to death with a rock. He was changed by Galatea into a stream on Mount Aetna.

Aconteus, a hunter, changed into stone at the sight of Medusa's head during the nuptials of Perseus and Andromeda.

Acrisius, son of Abas and Ocalea and father of Danae.

Actaeon, son of Aristaeus and Autonoe, who, because he watched Diana bathing, was changed into a stag and devoured by his own dogs.

Admeta, daughter of Eurystheus and priestess of Juno's temple at Argos. To obtain for Admeta the girdle of the queen of the Amazons was the ninth labor imposed upon Hercules by Eurystheus.

Admetus, king of Thessaly and husband of Alcestis. Apollo, who served him for a time as shepherd, urged the Fates to spare Admetus' life if some other person should be willing to die for him. Alcestis offered herself as substitute. Admetus was one of the Argonauts and was present at the hunt of the Calydonian boar.

Adonis, son of Cinyras and Myrrha and beloved by Venus. While hunting, he was killed by a wild boar and was transformed by Venus into the anemone. The gods of the underworld allowed him to spend six months of every year on earth with Venus.

Adrastus, king of Sicyon and leader of the Seven against Thebes, of whom he alone survived. Ten years later he led the Epigoni, sons of the Seven, to destroy Thebes.

Aeacus, son of Jupiter and Aegina. After the inhabitants of Aegina had been destroyed by pestilence, Jupiter transformed ants into human beings, whom Aeacus called Myrmidons. Aeacus with Minos and Rhadamanthus became a judge in the lower world.

Aeetes, king of Colchis and father of Medea, Absyrtus, and Chalciope. It was to his court that Phryxus fled on the back of a ram. After the ram had been sacrificed, its golden fleece was given to Aetes.

Aegeus, king of Athens and father of Theseus.

While at the court of Pittheus in Troezen, he married the king's daughter Aethra. Departing before the birth of his son, Aegeus told her to send Theseus to him as soon as he could lift the stone under which he had concealed his sword. Years later, when the young man arrived in Athens, his life was threatened by Medea, who meanwhile had married his father. Theseus soon sailed to Crete, where he destroyed the Minotaur. On his return voyage he forgot to hoist white sails—the pre-arranged signal of success—and Aegeus, concluding that his son was dead, threw himself from a high rock into the sea, which was named after him the Aegean.

Aegis, the shield of Jupiter, in the center of which was represented the Gorgon's head.

Aegisthus, king of Argos, son of Thyestes and Pelopea. He murdered Atreus to avenge the crime perpetrated against his father and ascended the throne of Mycenae, banishing Agamemnon and Menelaus. But Aegisthus at length became reconciled to the Atridae and during Agamemnon's absence at Troy was made guardian of his wife Clytemnestra. He fell in love with her, and the two murdered Agamemnon on his return from the Trojan War. Subsequently they themselves were killed by Orestes, son of Agamemnon.

Aeneades, descendants of Aeneas.

Aeneas, a Trojan prince, son of Venus and Anchises. At Troy he fought bravely against Diomedes and Achilles. After the storming of the city he rescued his father, his son, and the household gods and fled from the flaming ruins. With a number of companions he built twenty ships and set out for the Thracian Chersonesus; from there he sailed to Delos, the Strophades, Crete, and Epirus; thence to Drepanum, in Sicily, where he buried his father. On the voyage to Italy, the ships were driven upon the African coast near Carthage. In this city he was entertained by Queen Dido, whose unrequited love for him led her to commit suicide. Aeneas sailed back to Sicily, thence to Cumae, where the Sibyl conducted him to the lower world. After a voyage of seven years and the loss of thirteen ships, he reached the Tiber. Latinus, king of Latium, promised him his daughter Lavinia, already betrothed to Turnus. War ensued, and in a combat with Aeneas Turnus was killed. Aeneas later married Lavinia, in whose honor he built the town of Lavinium, and succeeded Latinus as king of Latium. After a short reign he died, either killed in war with the Etruscans or drowned in the river Numicus. The Caesars traced their origin to him, and his wanderings form the subject of Vergil's Aeneid.

Aeolus, son of Hippotes and god of the winds, who lived in the island of Aeolia. He presented Ulysses, on his return to Ithaca, with all the adverse winds tied in bags; but his companions from curiosity opened them, and so Ulysses was driven out of his course.

Aerone, wife of Atreus and mother of Agamemnon, Menelaus, and Anaxibia.

Aesacus, son of Priam by Alexirrhoe or by Arisba. Falling passionately in love with Hesperia, he pursued her till she despaired of escape; she flung herself into the sea and was transformed into a bird. At the same time Aesacus was changed into a cormorant.

Aesculapius, the god of healing and son of Apollo. He was killed by Jove's thunderbolt for restoring men to life.

Aeson, father of Jason and brother of Pelias, who succeeded his father as king in Iolchus but was deposed by Pelias. In old age Aeson was restored to youth by Medea's magic powers.

Agamemnon, king of Mycenae and Argos, brother of Menelaus, and son of Atreus. On the death of Atreus, Thyestes seized Argos, and Agamemnon with Menelaus was forced to leave the city. The brothers fled to Tyndareus, king of Sparta, who gave them his daughters in marriage: Clytemnestra to Agamemnon, and Helen to Menelaus. Later Tyndareus helped them to recover their father's kingdom; Agamemnon established himself at Mycenae, and Menelaus succeeded Tyndareus at Sparta. When Paris ran off with Helen, Agamemnon assumed command of the forces against Troy and fought with great valor. After the war Cassandra foretold his murder by Clytemnestra, but he nevertheless returned to Argos, where, as he was leaving the bath, Clytemnestra and Aegisthus murdered him.

Agenor, king of Phoenicia, son of Neptune and Libya, father of Cadmus, Phoenix, Cilix, and Europa. He was an ancestor of Dido, queen of Carthage.

Aglaia, one of the Graces, daughter of Jupiter and Eurynome.

Ahenobarbus, an ancestor of Nero, so named because his beard was changed to bronze by Castor and Pollux for refusing to believe in the victory at Lake Regillus.

Ajax, son of Telamon and next to Achilles the most famous Greek warrior. He sought to gain possession of the arms of Achilles after the latter's death. Informed that they had been awarded to Ulysses, he lost his mind and slaughtered a flock of sheep which he mistook for the sons of Atreus; then he stabbed himself, and where the blood from his wound sank into the earth appeared the hyacinth. The lesser Ajax was the son of Oileus and was swiftest of the Greeks after Achilles. On his return from Troy he was shipwrecked by Athena. He was rescued, but later for boasting of his escape he was killed by lightning.

Albion, Neptune's son by Amphitrite, who introduced astronomy and shipbuilding.

Alcathous, son of Pelops and king of Megara. Accused of slaying his brother Chrysippus, he escaped to Megara, killed a lion that had destroyed the king's son, and succeeded to the throne.

Alcestis, daughter of Pelias and Anaxibia and wife of Admetus. She willingly sacrificed her life to save Admetus from death. Through Hercules' efforts, however, she was brought back from the lower world and returned to her husband.

Alcimedea, mother of Jason by Aeson.

Alcinous, son of Nausithous and Periboea, king of Phaeacia. He married his niece, Arete, by whom he had a daughter, Nausicaa.

Alcithoe, daughter of Minyas, king of Thessaly. Her spindle was changed into a vine, her yarn into ivy, and she herself into a bat because she ridiculed Bacchus.

Alcmaeon, son of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle. He was driven to madness by the thought of having killed his mother. He fled from home and after a time married Arsinoe. But because he left her to marry Callirrhoe, her brothers killed him.

Alcmene, daughter of Electryon, who was promised in marriage to Amphitryon on condition that he avenge the death of her brothers. In Amphitryon's absence, however, Jupiter assumed his form and became the father of Alcmene's son Hercules.

Electryon, a youth placed on guard in order to warn Mars of the approach of Phoebus while the god of war was visiting Venus. Electryon was transformed into a cock for falling asleep.

Alpheus, the god of the river Alpheus in Arcadia. He fell in love with Arethusa, who was transformed by Diana into a fountain in the small island of Ortygia, near Syracuse. The Alpheus was said to flow under the sea and come to the surface in Ortygia.

Althaea, wife of Oeneus and mother of Meleager.

Amalthaea, daughter of King Melissus of Crete. She fed the infant Jupiter with goat's milk.

Amata, wife of King Latinus, who betrothed her daughter Lavinia to Turnus before Aeneas' arrival. When Amata learned that Aeneas had killed Turnus, she committed suicide.

Amazons, a race of warlike women dwelling in Asia Minor, who came to the help of Troy during the Trojan War.

Ambrosia, the food of the gods, which preserved for them their immortality.

Ammon, an ancient Egyptian divinity, identified with Jupiter and frequently referred to as Jupiter Ammon. The god was sometimes represented as a ram. One of his temples, renowned for its oracle, was in an oasis of the Libyan Desert, nine days' journey from Alexandria.

Amphiaraus, son of Oicles and Hypermnestra. He took part in the hunt of the Calydonian boar and in the Argonautic expedition. He was a great prophet; and though he foresaw the fatal end, he was persuaded by his wife Eriphyle to join the expedition of Adrastus against Thebes, where the earth swallowed him up before his enemies could kill him.

Amphion, a famous musician, the twin brother of Zethus, born to Jupiter by Antiope on Mount Cithaeron, where she had fled to avoid the wrath of Dirce. A shepherd succored the infants and when they had grown to manhood, they besieged Lycus, their granduncle, in Thebes, murdered him, and tied his wife Dirce to a wild bull, which dragged her to her death. Amphion became king of Thebes. While building the wall about the city, he played on his lyre, and the stones moved into position of their own accord. Niobe, daughter of Tantalus, was his wife.

Amphitrite, the daughter of Oceanus and Tethys and mother of Triton by Neptune.

Amphitryon, king of Thebes, who, because he avenged the deaths of the sons of Electryon, was appointed his successor and given his daughter Alcmene in marriage. While Amphitryon was absent, Jupiter appeared to Alcmene in the form of her husband and became the father of her child.

Amycus, son of Neptune, who became king of Melia. He was a skillful boxer but was killed by Pollux during a match.

Amyntor, king of Argos, who blinded his son Phoenix for insulting Clytia, his concubine.

Amyone, daughter of Danaus and Europa, who married Enceladus and killed him on the marriage night. Of the fifty Danaids she alone was absolved from the task of filling the leaky vessel in Hades because she had supplied Argos with water during a drought.

Anaxibia, sister of Agamemnon and wife of Nestor.

Ancaeus, an Argonaut killed at the Calydonian hunt.

Anchises, father of Aeneas and son of Capys and Themis. His surpassing beauty attracted Venus, herself the goddess of beauty, who fell in love with him and bore him Aeneas. After the fall of Troy Anchises was carried out of the city on the shoulders of his son. He accompanied Aeneas on his subsequent wanderings but died before reaching Italy.

Anchurus, the son of Midas, who sacrificed his life by leaping into a fissure in the earth. An oracle had declared that this chasm would not cease to swallow whatever appeared above it until Midas had thrown in what was most dear to him.

Androcles, a slave who was thrown to the wild animals in the Roman arena but was spared by a lion from whose foot he had once extracted a thorn in an African cave. Amazed at the lion's behavior, the Roman officials pardoned Androcles and presented him with the lion.

Androgynae, a race of hermaphrodites, who lived in the region of Africa beyond the Nasamones.

Andromache, wife of Hector and mother of Astyanax. The passage in Homer's Iliad describing her farewell to Hector as he is about to leave for battle, is one of the best-known passages in the poem. After her husband's death and the fall of Troy, Andromache became the prize of Pyrrhus. Pyrrhus died, and she married Helenus, a fellow-captive.

Andromeda, wife of Perseus and daughter of Cepheus, king of Aethiopia. Her mother was Cassiopeia, who boasted that she was more beautiful than the Nereids. Out of revenge for this insult to the sea nymphs, Neptune inundated the land and sent a sea monster to ravage the shore. To appease the god of the sea, Cepheus was commanded by the oracle of Ammon to chain his daughter to a rock out in the sea. Perseus came to the rescue, however, by turning the monster to stone with the magic head of Medusa. Andromeda was saved and became the wife of Perseus.

Antaeus, a Libyan giant and wrestler, son of Terra and Neptune, who was vanquished by Hercules. Realizing that Antaeus' strength depended upon contact with his mother Earth, Hercules lifted him from the ground and crushed the life out of him.

Antigone, daughter of Oedipus by Jocasta, who defied the order of Creon, king of Thebes, that the body of her brother Polynices remain un-

- buried. Condemned to be buried alive, Antigone killed herself.
- Antilochus, son of Nestor and Eurydice, killed at Troy by Memnon.
- Antiope, daughter of Nycteus, king of Thebes, who was wooed by Jupiter. To escape her father's anger, she fled to Mount Cithaeron, where her twin sons Amphion and Zethus were born.
- Antiphus, son of Priam, who was killed by Agamemnon.
- Aon, son of Neptune and king of Boeotia, after whom the Boeotians were called Aones, and the country Aonia.
- Aphrodite, the goddess of love and beauty, identified with Venus by the Romans.
- Apollo, god of light and prophecy and patron of the arts. He was the son of Jupiter and Latona and was born on Delos, which before had been a floating island, but was now anchored with chains to the bottom of the sea. Apollo became a renowned physician and himself instructed his son Aesculapius in medicine. When the latter was killed by Jupiter's thunderbolt for having restored the dead to life, Apollo took vengeance on the Cyclopes, who had forged the bolt. For this rash act he was ordered to shepherd the flocks of Admetus. Thereafter he aided Neptune in building the walls of Troy; however, because the king, Laomedon, refused him the promised reward, he sent a pestilence upon the inhabitants. Apollo's oracles were at Delphi—famed throughout the ancient world—Delos, Claros, Tenedos, Cyrrha, and Patara. The epithets most frequently applied to him were Pythius, Phoebus, Cynthius, and Lycius.
- Arachne, daughter of Idmon of Colophon, who was so expert in weaving that she challenged Minerva. She chose for designs scenes which depicted the foibles of the gods. Angered by such insults, Minerva tore up the web. Arachne hanged herself in despair and was transformed into a spider—which hangs by the thread it spins.
- Arcas, son of Jupiter and Callisto, who ruled over Pelasgia, which was called Arcadia after him.
- Ares, the Greek god of war, identified with Mars.
- Arethusa, a nymph who was pursued by the river-god Alpheus and changed by Diana into a fountain.
- Argia, daughter of Adrastus, who married Polyneices and was put to death by Creon for burying her husband against Creon's orders.
- Argiphontes, a name meaning "slayer of Argus," which was given to Mercury because he killed the hundred-eyed Argus.
- Argo, the ship used by Jason and his companions in their search for the Golden Fleece.
- Argonauts, the companions of Jason on the Argo, among whom were Hercules, Theseus, Aesculapius, Nestor, Orpheus, Castor and Pollux.
- Argus, a giant possessed of a hundred eyes, of which only two were asleep at a time. He was ordered by Juno to keep watch on Io, but Jupiter sent Mercury to kill him; afterward his eyes were put on the tail of Juno's sacred peacock.
- Ariadne, the daughter of Minos of Crete. Having fallen in love with Theseus, she gave him some thread by means of which he was able to find his way out of the labyrinth. After Theseus had killed the Minotaur, he married Ariadne but deserted her later at Naxos. Bacchus gave her a crown of seven stars, which was turned into a constellation.
- Arion, a famous musician, who, when returning from Sicily to Corinth with rich prizes, was threatened with death by the sailors. He leapt into the sea, and a dolphin, charmed by his playing, carried him safely to land.
- Aristaeus, a Libyan shepherd, son of Apollo and Cyrene, who was reared by the Seasons and nourished with nectar and ambrosia. He married Autonoe, by whom he had a son Actaeon. He was indirectly responsible for the death of Eurydice, for in fleeing from his advances, she stepped on a snake and died of its bite. He was the first to teach men the art of keeping bees.
- Arne, daughter of Aeolus, wooed by Neptune in the form of a bull.
- Artemis, a Greek goddess, the guardian of forests and wild animals, who was identified with Diana.
- Aruntius, a Roman intoxicated by Bacchus for ridiculing his rites and killed by his daughter Medullina, whom he had insulted.
- Ascalaphus, son of Acheron, who, having been appointed by Pluto to watch Proserpina in the Elysian Fields, testified that the goddess had eaten pomegranates. For his spying Proserpina changed him into an owl.
- Ascanius, son of Aeneas and Creusa and founder of Alba Longa.
- Astarte, a Syrian goddess, corresponding to the Greek Aphrodite.
- Asteria, daughter of Coeus, the Titan, and mother of Hecate. Courted by Zeus in the form of an eagle, she threw herself into the sea, where she was changed into an island, which was later called Delos.
- Astraea, daughter of Astraeus and goddess of justice during the Golden Age. Disgusted with the wickedness of mortals, she returned to heaven and was transformed into the constellation Virgo. She is represented as holding a pair of scales in one hand and a sword in the other.
- Astyanax, son of Hector and Andromache, who was thrown from the walls of Troy by the victorious Greeks.
- Atalanta, the name of two mythological characters. The daughter of Jasus, the Arcadian, was a huntress, who took part in the hunt for the Calydonian boar and shared with Meleager in the prize of victory. The daughter of Schoeneus, of Boeotia, was also a huntress, but she is known best for her ability in foot-racing. Refusing to marry anyone who could not outrun her, she insisted that all her suitors run a race with her in which the penalty of defeat was death. At last Hippomenes (or Milanion, according to others) defeated her. From Venus he had obtained three golden apples and, as he ran, he threw them down, one after another. Atalanta, fascinated by them, stopped to pick them up, and thus Hippomenes won the race and married Atalanta.
- Ate, the goddess of infatuation, who led men into rash actions.
- Athamas, king of Orchomenos and son of Aeolus. He married Nephele, who bore him Phryxus and Helle. Later he divorced her and married Ino, by whom he had Learchus and Melicertes. Ino was jealous of Nephele's children and persuaded an oracle to predict that a pestilence then raging could only by their sacrifice be arrested. On being led to the altar Phryxus and Helle fled to Colchis through the air on a golden ram, whose fleece was later sought by Jason. During the voyage Helle fell off into the sea, hence called the Hellespont. Juno dispatched the Fury Tisiphone to torture Athamas to madness. In this condition he killed Learchus, whereupon Ino threw herself into the sea and was changed into a sea-goddess.

Athena, a Greek goddess, corresponding to the Roman Minerva.

Atlantides, the seven daughters of Atlas: Maia, Electra, Taygeta, Sterope, Merope, Alcyone, and Celaeno.

Atlantis, an island said to have existed in the Atlantic, west of Gibraltar. It was once rich and powerful and blessed with every beauty but was later swallowed up by the ocean owing to the increasing wickedness of its inhabitants.

Atlas, son of Iapetus and Clymene and father of the Hesperides, Hyades, and Pleiades. He lived in northern Africa and carried the heavens on his shoulders. Perseus, after vanquishing the Gorgons, sought refuge with him. Because assistance was denied him, Perseus produced Medusa's head and changed Atlas into a mountain.

Atræus, son of Pelops by Hippodamia and king of Mycenæ. Suspected of the murder of his half brother Chrysippus, he fled to Argos and succeeded Eurystheus as king, marrying his daughter Aerope, who bore him Agamemnon and Menelaus. Thyestes, the brother of Atræus, who had been banished for seducing Aerope, sent Plisthenes, Atræus' eldest son by a former wife, to murder his own father. But Plisthenes was killed by Atræus. On learning that he had slain his own son, Atræus murdered the two sons of Thyestes and served them up to their father at a banquet. For this crime Atræus and his house were cursed by the gods, and he himself was finally killed by Aegisthus.

Atrides, any one of the descendants of Atræus but especially Agamemnon or Menelaus.

Atropos, one of the Fates, the goddess that cut the thread of life.

Attis, or Atys, a Phrygian god of fertility, who died and came to life again. He was loved by Cybele and was represented as a beautiful youth.

Augeas, king of Elis, owner of 3,000 oxen, whose enormous stables had not been cleaned for thirty years. The job of cleaning out the stalls was one of the twelve labors imposed on Hercules; for this work Augeas promised him a tenth of his herd. When Hercules diverted the waters of the Alpheus to send them through the stables, Augeas regarded this as a trick and refused to give him the reward. Hercules, therefore, conquered Elis and killed Augeas.

Aurora, daughter of Hyperion and Thea and goddess of the dawn, who rose from the couch of her husband Tithonus before the break of day. She is depicted as a veiled figure riding in a rose-colored chariot drawn by white horses and opening the gates of day.

Auster, the south wind, that brought rain and fog in winter and hot, dry air in summer.

Autolycus, son of Mercury, an Argonaut, and a notorious cattle thief. He was able to deceive the owners by changing the marks on the cattle, but Sisyphus, son of Aeolus, got the better of him by putting his marks under the feet of his oxen.

Automedon, son of Dioreus, charioteer to Achilles and afterward to Pyrrhus.

Avernus, a lake between Cumæ and Puteoli, the waters of which were so fatal that no birds could live near it. It was one of the entrances to Tartarus.

B

Bacchanalia, a Roman festival in honor of Bacchus, marked by wild revelry.

Bacchantes, devotees of Bacchus, who danced and threw themselves about in barbaric abandonment at the Bacchanalia.

Bacchus, the god of wine, son of Jupiter and Semele. He was saved by Jupiter from Juno's jealous wrath, which compassed his mother's death, and was intrusted to Ino. While living on Mount Nysa Bacchus discovered how to make wine from grapes and afterward traveled to many foreign lands to teach the art of cultivating the vine, tilling the soil, and collecting honey. He is generally represented as crowned with vine and ivy-leaves. He married Ariadne after she was deserted by Theseus at Naxos.

Baucis, the wife of Philemon, who lived with her husband in a small cottage in Phrygia, where they were visited by Jupiter and Mercury in disguise. As a reward for the hospitality extended to them, Jupiter transformed the cottage into a splendid temple. Baucis and Philemon lived to a ripe old age and at death were changed into trees before the temple's doors.

Bellerophon, the son of Glaucus, who was sent by Iobates, king of Lycia, to attack the Chimaera, a fire-breathing monster. This action had been urged upon the king by his son-in-law, Proetus, whose wife accused Bellerophon of seducing her. Aided by Minerva, Bellerophon succeeded in destroying the Chimaera. Thereafter he tried to fly to heaven on his winged horse Pegasus, but Jupiter sent a gadfly to sting the horse and Bellerophon was thrown to earth. He wandered about, lame and blind, for the rest of his life.

Bellona, the goddess of war, daughter of Phorcys and Ceto, and companion or sister of Mars. Her priests, called Bellonarii, inflicted wounds on themselves when offering sacrifices.

Bergion, a giant, son of Neptune, who was killed with stones thrown from heaven, when he opposed Hercules.

Beroë, the nurse of Semele, whose form Juno assumed when she appeared before Semele. Juno persuaded Semele to obtain proof as to whether it was actually Jupiter who was visiting her.

Bomonicæ, the youths who were whipped at the altar of Diana Orthia during her festivals. The one who cried out the least was awarded the prize.

Bona Dea, Roman goddess of fecundity. At her festival, celebrated on the 1st of May, no male was permitted to be present.

Boreas, the north or northeast wind, who carried away Orithyia to Mount Haemus in Thrace. According to one version he was the son of Astraeus and Aurora. He possessed twelve mares of such fleetness that they could cross the sea without getting their feet wet.

Branchus, son of Smicrus of Miletus, to whom Apollo gave the power of prophecy.

Briareus, son of Coelus and Terra, a giant with a hundred arms and fifty heads, who helped the Olympians against the Titans.

Briseis, a beautiful woman who was part of the spoils appropriated by Achilles after the conquest of Lyrnessus. Later Agamemnon claimed her, causing Achilles to withdraw from the Trojan War. After the death of Patroclus she was given back to Achilles.

Bucephalus, favorite horse of Alexander the Great, which died in India.

Busiris, king of Egypt and son of Neptune and Libya. When Hercules was in Egypt, Busiris had him bound hand and foot and carried to the altar. Hercules freed himself, however, and slew both Busiris and his courtiers.

C

Cacus, a giant, son of Vulcan and Medusa, who lived in a cave on the Aventine Hill. He stole some of the cattle of Hercules and dragged them by the tails into his cave. Hercules heard them low, however, and strangled Cacus.

Cadmus, son of Agenor, who, unable to find his sister Europa and not wishing to return home without her, consulted the Delphic oracle as to where he should settle. The oracle told him to follow a certain cow and to found a city where the cow should lie down. He killed a dragon, which lived near the spot where the cow lay down, and sowed its teeth in the ground. The armed men who sprang from the dragon's teeth formed the original population of Thebes. Cadmus later married Harmonia, who was the daughter of Venus.

Caduceus, the magic wand of Mercury, with which he conducted the souls of mortals across the Styx and raised the dead to life.

Caeneus, a girl transformed by Neptune into a man, who took part in the Calydonian hunt. Later he was transformed into a bird, but in Elysium he became a girl again.

Calchas, the Greek soothsayer and high priest who was chosen to accompany the Greeks to Troy. He declared that the fleet could not sail until Iphigenia was sacrificed; that the plague could not be stopped till Chryseis was restored to her father; and that Troy could not be taken without Achilles' aid, nor without a ten years' siege.

Calliope, the Muse of epic poetry, daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne. She was the mother of Orpheus by Apollo.

Callirrhoe, daughter of Scamander, who married Tros and became the mother of Ganymede and Assaracus. Coresus fell in love with her, but she scorned him. This angered Bacchus, whose priest Coresus was, and the god sent a pestilence; whereupon the oracle demanded that Callirrhoe should be sacrificed. Coresus, compelled to lead the nymph to the altar, stabbed himself. Callirrhoe fled to Attica and there on the brink of a fountain killed herself.

Callisto, one of Diana's attendants and a daughter of King Lycaon, of Arcadia, who was changed into a bear and placed in the sky among the stars.

Calydon, a city of Aetolia, which was devastated by a boar sent by Diana in revenge for the neglect of her rites. This disaster gave rise to the famous hunt for the Calydonian boar, in which many heroes took part. Meleager succeeded in slaying the animal and presented its head to Atalanta.

Calypso, a sea nymph and queen of Ogygia. She offered Ulysses hospitality on his being shipwrecked, fell in love with him, and detained him seven years.

Camenae, fountain nymphs and goddesses of prophecy, who were identified with the Greek Muses.

Camilla, a warlike Volscian heroine, who was killed in the war between Aeneas and Turnus.

Capaneus, one of the Seven against Thebes, son of Hipponous and Astinome, and husband of Evadne. Having vowed to take Thebes in spite of Jupiter, he was killed with a stroke of lightning. On hearing the news Evadne committed suicide.

Cassandra, daughter of Priam and Hecuba, to whom Apollo granted the gift of prophecy. When she resisted him, however, he ordered that no one should believe her. After the fall of Troy, she became the captive of Agamemnon, who took her to Mycenae, where Clytemnestra put her to death.

Cassiopeia, mother of Andromeda and wife of Cepheus.

Castalia, a fountain on Mount Parnassus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses.

Castor, twin brother of Pollux and noted for his skill in taming horses. The two brothers joined in the Calydonian hunt and Argonautic expedition. In the struggle with Idas and Lynceus, Castor was slain and after the death of Pollux the brothers were placed among the stars as the Gemini.

Cecrops, founder and first king of Athens.

Celaeno, a daughter of Atlas; also one of the Harpies.

Centaurs, a race of creatures half horse, half human, who inhabited Mount Pelion. They engaged in the famous contest with the Lapithae. Later the greater number of them were killed by Hercules, and the rest driven to Mount Pindus.

Cerberus, the three-headed dog which kept watch over the gates of Hades. It was one of the labors of Hercules to bring Cerberus to the upper world.

Ceres, the Roman goddess of the earth's produce, especially of grain, who was identified with Demeter. When her daughter Proserpina was carried away by Pluto, Ceres in her anger caused the earth to withhold its fruits and was appeased only when Proserpina was brought back. But since she had eaten a pomegranate seed in Hades, Proserpina had to spend half of each year in the lower world.

Chaos, the unfathomable abyss from which the earth, its first occupants, and all else gradually proceeded.

Charon, son of Erebus, whose duty it was to ferry the souls of the dead over the waters of the

- Styx and the Acheron to the infernal regions, receiving an obolus for each passenger; hence the ancient Roman custom of putting an obolus into the mouth of a corpse before interment.
- Charybdis, a whirlpool in the Strait of Messina, exceedingly perilous to ships, which in avoiding Charybdis often ran aground on Scylla.
- Chimaera, a monster shaped like a lion in front, a dragon behind, and a goat in the middle, which devastated Lycia until it was killed by Bellerophon.
- Chiron, the most famous of the centaurs, killed by an arrow from the bow of Hercules.
- Chryseis, a daughter of a priest of Apollo, taken prisoner by the Greeks and given to Agamemnon. Her father, Chryses, asked for her release, but Agamemnon refused; whereupon Apollo sent a plague upon the Greeks. To free them from this curse, Agamemnon had to surrender Chryseis.
- Circe, daughter of Helios and Perseis and famous as a sorceress. After murdering her husband, she was banished to the island of Aea, to which Ulysses and his companions were later driven. Receiving them into her palace, she served them a magic concoction, touched them with her wand, and turned them into swine. Ulysses himself, who was saved by partaking of a herb that made the magic potion powerless, forced Circe to turn his companions back into men.
- Clio, the Muse of history.
- Clotho, one of the Fates, the goddess that spun the thread of life.
- Clytemnestra, daughter of Tyndareus and Leda; sister of Castor, Pollux, and Helen; and wife of Agamemnon. While her husband was at Troy, she lived with Aegisthus in adultery. On Agamemnon's return she murdered him; later she herself was slain by her son Orestes.
- Clytie, a water nymph, who fell in love with Apollo. She was transformed by him into a sunflower, so that she might always be turned toward him in his daily journey across the sky.
- Comus, the god of revelry and feasting.
- Coriolanus, a Roman patrician, exiled because of his haughty bearing toward the people. He joined the Volscians and led them against Rome but was finally persuaded by his mother and wife to retreat without attacking the city.
- Cornucopia, the horn of plenty, presented by Jupiter to Amalthea in return for her having fed him while young with goat's milk.
- Creon, king of Thebes, whose decree condemning Antigone to be buried alive was the cause of her suicide, as well as that of her lover, Haemon, who was Creon's own son.
- Cronus, one of the Titans, son of Uranus and Gaea, and father of Jupiter, Neptune, Pluto, Juno, Ceres, and Vesta. He was identified with Saturn by the Romans.
- Cupid, son of Venus and god of love, who pierced the hearts of gods and men with arrows of desire. He was identified with Eros.
- Cybele, a Phrygian goddess, worshiped as mother of the gods. She was identified with the Greek goddess Rhea and the Roman Magna Mater.
- Cyclopes, a race of shepherds of gigantic stature with only one eye, which was in the middle of the forehead. They lived near Mount Aetna and assisted Vulcan at his forges.
- Daedalus, a cunning craftsman, who flew from Crete to Italy with his son Icarus by means of wings fastened to their shoulders with wax. Daedalus arrived safely, but Icarus, flying too near the sun, which melted the wax, fell into the sea.
- Danaë, daughter of Acrisius, king of Argos, and mother of Perseus. An oracle predicted that some day her son would kill his grandfather, Acrisius. To prevent such a calamity, the king had his daughter imprisoned in a dungeon so that no one might marry her. But she was visited by Jupiter, who distilled himself into a shower of gold. After the birth of Perseus, she and the child were put in a chest and thrown into the sea, but they drifted to the shore of Seriphus and were saved. The oracle's prediction came true, for Acrisius was accidentally killed by a quoit thrown by Perseus.
- Danaus, son of Belus and twin brother of Aegyptus. Aegyptus had fifty sons, Danaus had fifty daughters. To escape his brother and his nephews, Danaus fled with his daughters to Argos and there became king. Hearing of their uncle's success, the sons of Aegyptus betook themselves to Argos and demanded his daughters for wives. On the wedding night each wife killed her husband with a dagger provided by Danaus. Only one escaped, Lynceus, who killed Danaus.
- Daphne, a nymph who was loved by Apollo but did not return his love. She fled, pursued by the god, and when she could run no more, she was changed into a laurel. Thereafter the laurel was Apollo's favorite tree.
- Daphnis, a Sicilian shepherd, famous as a flutist. He was struck with blindness for faithlessness to a naiad.
- Dardanus, son of Jupiter and Electra, who was the founder of Troy and the ancestor of the Trojans.
- Dejanira, wife of Hercules and sister of Meleager, for whose love Achelous fought a fierce battle with Hercules. Afterward, jealous of her husband's attentions toward Iole, Dejanira steeped one of his robes in the poisonous blood of Nessus. The poison entered his body, and as he tried to pull off the garment, which clung to his skin, he tore away huge layers of flesh.
- Delphi, a city in central Greece, famous for the temple and oracle of Apollo.
- Demeter, Mother Earth, identified with the Roman goddess, Ceres.
- Deucalion, son of Prometheus and husband of Pyrrha. Deucalion and Pyrrha were the only persons that survived the deluge sent by Jupiter to destroy the inhabitants of the earth. In order to repeople the earth, they were ordered to throw behind them the bones of their mother; therefore, picking up some stones from Mother Earth, they flung these behind them. The stones cast by Deucalion were transformed into men, and those by Pyrrha into women.
- Diana, goddess of hunting, daughter of Jupiter and Latona, and twin sister of Apollo. She was also goddess of the moon. Two of her famous temples were at Ephesus and Taurus.
- Dido, queen of Carthage, who fled from Tyre with a large number of friends and followers and established a colony on the coast of Africa opposite Sicily. She assisted Aeneas after he had been shipwrecked and fell in love with him. When he left her to sail on to Italy, she killed herself.

Diomedes, son of Tydeus and king of Argos, who was a prominent Greek chieftain in the Trojan War. He fought with Mars in single combat, wounding him so severely that the god of war retired from the battle.

Dionysus, the god of wine and vegetation, who was identified with Bacchus.

Dioscuri, a name applied to Castor and Pollux, twin sons of Tyndareus and Leda. They rescued their sister Helen from Theseus, took part in the Argonautic expedition, and performed many other great deeds while on earth. Pollux was famed for his skill in boxing, Castor for his ability to manage horses. The Dioscuri were regarded as the patrons of seafarers. At the request of Pollux, Jupiter allowed them to share alternate days in the upper and the lower world.

Dirce, wife of Lycus, who herself suffered the torture which she planned to inflict upon Antiope: to be tied to the horns of a wild bull and dragged to her death.

Dryads, wood nymphs; the spirits or souls of trees. They were not immortal; each Dryad came to life and died with her tree.

E

Echo, a mountain nymph who diverted the attention of Juno while Jupiter made love to other nymphs. When Juno discovered the deception, she transformed her into an echo, depriving her of the power of speaking except when spoken to. Echo pined away with love for Narcissus, until only her voice remained.

Electra, daughter of Agamemnon, who sent her brother Orestes to King Strophius in Phocis in order to protect him from Clytemnestra, her mother. After Orestes had avenged his father's death by killing his mother, Electra married her brother's good friend Pylades.

Elysium, the abode of the spirits of the blessed.

Endymion, a shepherd on Mount Latmos, a beautiful youth loved by Selene, who chose perpetual sleep in preference to death. He sleeps in a cave in Caria, where Selene visits him by night.

Erato, the Muse of love poetry.

Erebus, son of Chaos, who is one of the deities of the lower world. He is a personification of that dread darkness through which departing souls pass to Hades.

Eros, the Greek god of love, identified with Cupid.

Eteocles, a son of Oedipus and Jocasta. After his father's death, he and his brother Polynices agreed to reign in alternate years, Eteocles taking the first turn. At the end of his year, however, he refused to relinquish the throne. Polynices, therefore, appealed to Adrastus, king of Argos, whose daughter he had married. Adrastus sent an army and seven of his bravest generals (the Seven against Thebes) to his son-in-law's aid, and a severe conflict ensued. In the end the two brothers agreed to settle their differences by single combat, and both were slain.

Eumenides, avenging spirits, known also as Furies.

Euphrosyne, one of the Graces, daughter of Jupiter and Eurynome.

Europa, daughter of Agenor, king of Phoenicia. She was loved by Jupiter, who assumed the form of a white bull and carried her off to Crete, where she became the mother of Minos, Sarpedon, and Rhadamanthus.

Eurydice, wife of Orpheus, who was granted permission to leave Hades and accompany her husband to the world above on condition that he should not turn around to look at her until they had reached the upper world. But Orpheus, unable to resist the temptation, turned around. Eurydice had disappeared.

Eurystheus, king of Mycenae, who imposed on Hercules the "twelve labors."

Euterpe, the Muse of lyric poetry.

Evander, son of Mercury, who was leader of a group of Arcadian colonists that settled in Italy. He joined Aeneas in the war against Turnus.

F

Fates, three daughters of Jupiter and Themis, who controlled the actions and destinies of man: Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos.

Faunus, an old Italian divinity, protector of agriculture and shepherds. He was identified with the Greek Pan.

Flora, the goddess of flowers.

Furies, three hideous, winged females, sprung from the blood of the mutilated Uranus: Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megaera. They were avenging deities, who pursued and punished the guilty, especially murderers.

G

Galatea, the name of two mythological characters. The sea nymph of this name, who fell in love with Acis, was the daughter of Nereus and Doris. The other Galatea was the girl whom Aphrodite brought to life when she transformed Pygmalion's statue of a maiden into a living form.

Ganymede, cupbearer to the gods, a mortal youth of such grace and beauty that Jupiter had him carried off to Olympus on the back of an eagle.

Genius Loci, the special divinity assigned to a particular place or region.

Glaucus, the name of several mythological characters, of whom two deserve to be identified: Glaucus, the father of Bellerophon; and Glaucus, the Boeotian fisherman, who was changed by Oceanus into a divinity of the sea and granted the gift of prophecy by Apollo. His oracles are highly prized by fishermen.

Golden Fleece, the hide of the golden ram, intrusted by Phryxus to Aeetes and guarded by Argus, the hundred-eyed dragon. It was for the purpose of obtaining this fleece that Jason fitted out the Argonautic expedition.

Gorgons, three hideous wenches, whose heads were covered with snakes instead of hair. The one most frequently mentioned is Medusa. The others are Stheno and Euryale.

Graces, three daughters of Jupiter—Euphrosyne, Aglaia, and Thalia—who represented the perfection of grace in body and mind. They are known also as the Charites and are usually shown as attendants of Venus.

H

Hades, a name applied both to the ruler and to the regions of the underworld. The ruler, known also as Pluto, was the son of Saturn and the brother of Jupiter and Neptune. His wife was Proserpina. Hades is often represented as seated on a throne, with Cerberus lying at his feet.

Haemon, son of Creon and lover of Antigone. On hearing that his sweetheart had committed suicide, he too killed himself.

Hamadryads, tree nymphs, usually called Dryads.

Harpies, greedy monsters with female heads, long claws, and wings, sent by the gods to torment mortals.

Hebe cupbearer to the gods and daughter of Jupiter and Juno. She was represented as the goddess of youth and was called Juventas by the Romans.

Hecate, goddess of sorcery and witchcraft, often represented with three heads, who personified the darkness and terror of night. She was identified both with Diana and with Proserpina. Her domain extended over heaven, earth, and hell. She particularly haunted cross-roads and was associated with the howling of dogs.

Hector, son of Priam and Hecuba and husband of Andromache, who was the leader of the Trojan forces and the most valiant of them all. After killing Patroclus in battle, he was himself slain by Achilles, whom he had provoked to fight again. Hector's body was dragged in triumph three times around the walls of Troy. Jupiter then interposed and ordered the body to be given up to Priam for burial.

Hecuba, wife of Priam and queen of Troy, who saw her husband and her sons killed by the Greeks. After the capture of Troy, she fell to the lot of Ulysses and accompanied the conquerors on their voyage back to Greece. While in the Thracian Chersonesus, after trying to avenge the murder of her son Polydorus, she cast herself into the sea.

Helen, daughter of Jupiter and Leda, famed for her beauty. In her youth she was carried off to Attica by Theseus and Pirithous but was rescued by her brothers, Castor and Pollux. She became the wife of Menelaus, king of Sparta, but later Paris, son of Priam, persuaded her to forsake her husband and accompany him to Troy. To avenge this insult, Menelaus urged the Greek princes to attack Troy. When Paris was killed, in the ninth year of the war, Helen married Deiphobus. Shortly afterward she betrayed him in order to regain the favor of Menelaus. She went back to Menelaus and lived with him until his death.

Helenus, son of Priam and Hecuba, famous for his prophetic powers, who settled in Epirus after the Trojan War and was married to Andromache.

Helicon, a mountain in Boeotia, sacred to Apollo and the Muses.

Helios or Sol, the god of the sun, who daily drove his four-horsed chariot across the sky.

Helle, daughter of Nephele and Athamas, who during her flight on the golden ram fell into the strait separating Europe from Asia, the strait later named the Hellespont in her honor.

Hephaestus, the Greek god of fire, identified with Vulcan.

Hera, wife of Zeus, identified with Juno.

Heracles or Hercules, son of Jupiter and Alcmene, renowned for his strength. While yet in his cradle he strangled two serpents which Juno had sent to destroy him. Before reaching manhood he killed the lion of Mount Cithaeron. Afterward, having been driven mad by Juno, he killed his own children and those of his brother. On recovering he was so stricken with grief that he exiled himself and went to consult the oracle of Apollo at Delphi. He was commanded to serve Eurystheus for twelve years, during which period he performed twelve labors. The gods assisted him in his tasks, and he carried them out successfully. His first labor was to kill the lion of Nemea, which he choked to death; the second, to destroy the nine-headed Lernaean hydra, which he killed with his club; the third was to capture the Arcadian stag, which he caught in a trap; the fourth, to kill the wild boar of Erymanthus; the fifth, to clean the Augean stables; the sixth, to kill the carnivorous birds of Stympthalis; the seventh, to capture the wild bull of Crete; the eighth, to capture the mares of Diomedes; the ninth, to obtain the girdle of the queen of the Amazons; the tenth, to capture the oxen of Geryon; the eleventh, to obtain the golden apples from the garden of the Hesperides; and the twelfth, to bring Cerberus, the three-headed dog of Hades, to the upper world. Hercules was now free from service to Eurystheus and returned to Thebes. He married Dejanira, daughter of Oeneus of Calydon. When Nessus, a centaur, tried to abduct her, Hercules shot him with a poisoned arrow. The dying Nessus told Dejanira to keep his blood, as it would always preserve her husband's love. Later, fearing that she was being supplanted by Iole, Dejanira sent Hercules a garment soaked in the blood of Nessus, which poisoned him. After his death he was taken to Olympus and endowed with immortality.

Hermes, messenger of the gods, identified with Mercury.

Hero, the sweetheart of Leander, who killed herself when she learned that her lover had been drowned.

Hesperides, the three daughters of Atlas and Hesperis, appointed to guard the golden apples which Earth gave Juno at her marriage to Jupiter. The dragon, Ladon, which was always on guard at the foot of the tree, was slain by Hercules when he seized the apples.

Hesperus, the evening star, king of the Western Lands.

Hippocrene, a fountain at the foot of Mount Helicon, dedicated to the Muses. It began to flow when the ground was struck by the hoofs of the winged horse, Pegasus.

Hippolytus, son of Theseus, who, having spurned the advances made by Phaedra, his stepmother, was accused of attempting to dishonor her.

Horatius Cocles, a Roman soldier, who with two comrades held off the Etruscan army from the bridge across the Tiber, while his fellow-soldiers were cutting down the bridge. When the bridge was destroyed, he leaped into the river and swam safely to the Roman shore.

Hyacinthus, a beautiful youth, accidentally killed by Apollo while playing quoits. From his blood sprang the hyacinth.

Hydra, a many-headed monster. The Lernaean hydra, which Hercules slew, was a water serpent with nine heads, one of which was immortal. For each head cut off, two would grow in its place unless the wound was cauterized. Hercules succeeded in burning away eight of its heads and buried the ninth under a rock.

Hygieia, goddess of health, daughter of Aesculapius.

Hylas, a beautiful youth loved by Hercules, who accompanied him on board the Argo. While Hylas was drawing water at a spring, a nymph drew him into the water and drowned him.

Hymen, or Hymenaeus, the god of marriage, represented as a youth bearing a bridal torch.

Hyperion, one of the Titans, son of Uranus and Gaea. He was the father by Thea of Helios, the sun-god; of Selene, the moon-goddess; and of Eos, goddess of the dawn.

I

Icarus, son of Daedalus, who fell into the sea, named after him the Icarian Sea.

Io, princess of Argos and daughter of Inachus. She was loved by Jupiter, who, to allay the suspicions of Juno, transformed her into a heifer. But Juno was aware of the change and put Argus to watch her. When Argus was killed by Mercury, Juno tormented Io with a gadfly, which drove her from place to place until she reached the Nile, where she recovered her form and bore a son to Jupiter.

Iphigenia, daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, who was offered as a sacrifice to Artemis. At the outbreak of the Trojan War a priest of Apollo declared that the wrath of the gods, which had been aroused by Agamemnon's killing of a sacred stag, could not be appeased except by the sacrifice of Iphigenia; and furthermore, that contrary winds would detain the fleet until this was done. As the priest, raising his knife, was about to perform the sacrifice, Artemis carried Iphigenia off to Tauris and substituted a hind. The Greeks proceeded against Troy. Afterward Iphigenia, who meanwhile had become a priestess, was instrumental in saving the life of her brother Orestes when he was about to be sacrificed.

Iris, goddess of the rainbow, who was often sent as a messenger by the gods.

Ixion, king of Thessaly, who had promised his father-in-law, Deioneus, a valuable gift but being unable to obtain it, put him to death in order to be released from his promise. After a long period of expiation, he was summoned by Jupiter to Mount Olympus and placed at the table of the gods. But Ixion, ill requiting the hospitality of his host, began to make love to Juno. As a punishment Ixion was sent to Hades and there tied to a fiery wheel, that never ceased to revolve.

J

Janus, an old Italian divinity, represented with two faces, turned in opposite directions. He was the god of beginnings and entrances; wherefore, the first month of the year was named after him, and gates and doorways were under his protection. His temple at Rome was open in time of war and closed in time of peace.

Jason, son of Aeson and leader of the Argonautic expedition. When his father was driven from the throne by Pelias, Jason was rescued and brought up by the centaur Chiron. Grown to manhood, he demanded the restitution of his father's kingdom, a request which Pelias promised to satisfy if Jason would bring him the Golden Fleece, kept by Aeetes in the custody of a dragon. Accordingly, Jason had a ship built, which was named the Argo. He assembled a crew and set out for Colchis. King Aeetes agreed to part with the fleece if Jason would perform several seemingly impossible deeds, such as yoking the fire-breathing oxen and sowing the dragon's teeth. He accomplished these tasks with the help of Medea, Aeetes' daughter, who had fallen in love with him. Shortly thereafter Jason returned home with the fleece, taking Medea with him. After several years he deserted her for another woman. Medea was driven mad with jealousy and in revenge killed her children by Jason. Years later Jason was killed by a beam that fell from his ship, the Argo.

Juno, daughter of Cronus and Rhea, sister and wife of Jupiter, and queen of heaven. She was an exacting and jealous wife, taking severe vengeance upon the numerous mortal maidens of whom Jupiter became enamored, as well as upon their offspring. She was the mother of Mars, Vulcan, and Hebe. In the Trojan War she was on the side of the Greeks.

Jupiter, son of Cronus and Rhea, father of gods and men, and lord of Olympus. He was brought up in a cave on Mount Ida so that he might be safe from his father, who had eaten all his other children. With the help of the Cyclopes he defeated Cronus and the other Titans and thus became master of the world. He gave the sea to Neptune, the infernal regions to Pluto, reserving heaven for himself. He is usually depicted as seated on a throne, with thunderbolts in one hand and a scepter of cypress in the other, wearing a wreath of olive or myrtle.

L

Lachesis, one of the Fates, the goddess that measured the thread of life.

Laertes, king of Ithaca, and father of Ulysses.

Laocoön, brother of Anchises, priest of Apollo and later of Neptune, who warned the Trojans against bringing the wooden horse into Troy. While the people hesitated whether to accept or reject his advice, two giant serpents emerged from the sea and attacked his sons. Rushing to their rescue, Laocoön himself was attacked, and all three persons were strangled.

Laodamia, wife of Protesilaus, in answer to whose prayers her husband was restored to life for three hours. When he died a second time, Laodamia died with him.

Laomedon, father of Priam and king of Troy, for whom Neptune built the walls of Troy. When Laomedon refused to give the promised reward, Neptune sent a monster to plague the city. The king was prepared to sacrifice his daughter to the beast, but Hercules appeared, rescued her, and slew the monster. Because Laomedon again broke his promise, Hercules attacked the city and killed him.

Lapithae, a people of Thessaly, who engaged in battle with the centaurs at the marriage feast of Hippodamia and Pirithous, their king.

Lares, ancient Roman divinities, the deified spirits of ancestors, who shielded their descendants against harm.

Latona, or Leto, daughter of Coeus and Phoebe and mother by Jupiter of Apollo and Diana. Persecuted by Juno, she wandered from place to place until Jupiter gave her a refuge on Delos, where she gave birth to her children.

Leander, a youth of Abydos, who swam nightly across the Hellespont to visit his sweetheart, Hero, living in Sestos. He was guided by a lamp which she hung out from a tower, but one stormy night the light was blown out, and Leander, losing his way, was drowned. On seeing his body washed up by the waves, Hero threw herself into the sea and was drowned.

Leda, wife of Tyndareus, king of Sparta, who was loved and approached by Jupiter in the form of a swan. She brought forth two eggs, from one of which sprang Helen and from the other Castor and Pollux.

M

Mars, the god of war, son of Jupiter and Juno, and lover of Venus.

Medea, a sorceress, wife of Jason, who murdered her own children to take vengeance upon her husband.

Medusa, one of the Gorgons, a terrible monster with hissing serpents for hair, whose face turned the beholder into stone. She was killed by Perseus, who, while observing her image in a mirror, cut off her head with his sword.

Meleager, son of Oeneus and Althaea, who took part in the Argonautic expedition and led the chase for the Calydonian boar. It had been decreed by the Fates that he should live only so long as a certain firebrand should remain unconsumed. Accordingly, his mother snatched the brand from the fire and jealously guarded it. When Althaea heard of Meleager's slaying of the boar, she went to the temple to return thanks. On the way, however, she came upon the bodies of her brothers, who had been slain by Meleager because they protested against the skin's being given to Atalanta. This so incensed Althaea that she cast the fatal brand into the fire, and when the brand was consumed, Meleager was dead.

Melpomene, the Muse of tragedy.

Menelaus, son of Atreus, brother of Agamemnon, and king of Sparta, who was one of the prominent Greek generals in the Trojan War. The abduction of his wife, Helen, was the cause of that war.

Mentor, friend of Ulysses and tutor of Telemachus, to whom was intrusted the care and education of the son of Ulysses during the latter's absence at Troy. The word "mentor" has become proverbial for a wise and faithful counselor.

Mercury, son of Jupiter and Maia, messenger of the gods, god of commerce, and patron of travelers, shepherds, traders, and robbers. Many of his exploits turn upon thievery or mischief. He wore a winged cap and had wings attached to his ankles that he might transport himself from place to place with the speed of the wind.

Midas, king of Phrygia, who, having done Bacchus a service, was permitted to choose his reward. Accordingly, he asked that whatever he touched be turned into gold. His prayer was granted. But when the food he touched, the clothes he wore, the water he washed in, turned into gold, he soon asked that the gift be revoked. On another occasion, because Midas ventured to remark that Pan made better music than Apollo, he was given ass's ears. At first, his barber was the only man to find out. Midas could not keep the secret to himself, however, and whispered it into a hole in the earth. Later, in this place, reeds grew up and as they were shaken by the wind they murmured and thus revealed the secret.

Minerva, goddess of wisdom, arts, and defensive warfare, who sprang full-grown from Jupiter's head. She was impervious to the passion of love and is depicted as wearing a helmet and carrying a shield. She was patron goddess of Athens, which was awarded to her as the result of a contest with Neptune, in which the city was to fall to the one who should present the more useful gift. Neptune produced the horse, and Minerva the olive.

Minos, the name of two kings of Crete. The one was a famous lawgiver, son of Jupiter and Europa, who became a judge in the lower world. The other was a grandson of the above-mentioned king, whose wife, Pasiphae, gave birth to a monster, the Minotaur. Minos had refused to sacrifice a white bull sent him by Neptune in answer to his prayer. As punishment for the king's perfidy Neptune drove his queen mad with love for the bull. To confine the offspring of this vile love affair, Minos commissioned Daedalus to construct a prison, known as the labyrinth.

Minotaur, the half-bull, half-human creature, offspring of Pasiphae and a bull, which was confined in the Cretan labyrinth by Minos. Every year the monster devoured seven youths and seven maidens sent as tribute by the Athenians. Finally, with Ariadne's help the Minotaur was slain by Theseus.

Morpheus, son of Somnus, who was the god of sleep and dreams. He is generally represented as a chubby, winged child, holding poppies in his hand.

Muses, daughters of Jupiter and Mnemosyne, nine divinities who presided over the arts. Their names and the arts assigned to them were: Clio, history; Euterpe, lyric poetry; Thalia, comedy; Melpomene, tragedy; Terpsichore, choral dance and song; Erato, erotic poetry; Polyhymnia, religious poetry and song; Urania, astronomy; Calliope, epic poetry.

N

Naiads, water nymphs, the daughters of Jupiter.

Narcissus, a beautiful youth, son of the river-god Cephissus, with whom the nymph Echo fell in love. But Narcissus did not return her love. To avenge what she regarded as a rebuke to herself, Venus, the goddess of love, caused him to become enamored of his own reflection in the waters of a stream. Unable to embrace or kiss the image, he pined away until he was changed into a flower, the narcissus.

Nemesis, goddess of vengeance and daughter of Night, who relentlessly meted out punishment to evildoers and lawbreakers.

Neoptolemus, or Pyrrhus, son of Achilles, who fought at Troy and later settled in Epirus, where he was killed by Orestes.

Nephele, wife of Athamas and mother of Phryxus and Helle.

Neptune, son of Saturn and Rhea and brother of Jupiter and Pluto, who was god of the sea. He made love to Amphitrite by assuming the form of a dolphin. His greatest gift to mankind was the horse. He is usually represented as seated in a chariot, drawn across the sea by brazen-hoofed horses, attended by Tritons and nymphs, and holding a trident in his hand.

Nereus, a sea divinity, son of Oceanus and Terra, and husband of Doris, by whom he had fifty daughters, called the Nereids. He was gifted with prophecy and lived in the Aegean Sea.

Nessus, a centaur slain by Hercules.

Nestor, king of Pylos, the oldest of the Greek commanders in the Trojan War, who was known for his wise counsel.

Niobe, daughter of Tantalus and wife of Amphion, whose intense pride in her children was the cause of their destruction. Because she had seven sons and seven daughters, she sneered at the goddess Latona, who had only two children, Apollo and Diana. Latona roused her children to take revenge for this insult. Apollo killed all Niobe's sons, while Diana killed all her daughters. Niobe herself was transformed by Jupiter into stone, from which streamed incessant tears.

Nisus, king of Megara, whose lock of purple hair (on which his life and fortune depended) was snipped off by his daughter Scylla and presented to King Minos, with whom she had fallen deeply in love. Nisus was transformed into a sea-eagle, and his daughter into a monster of barking dogs and hissing serpents.

Notus, the south wind, called also Austere.

Nymphs, female divinities that inhabited certain objects or places in nature. There were (1) Oceanids and Nereids, who were sea nymphs; (2) Naiads, fresh-water nymphs; (3) Dryads and Hamadryads, tree nymphs; and (4) Oreads, mountain nymphs.

O

Oceanus, son of Uranus and Gaea, brother of Cronus, and husband of Tethys, who was god of the sea and father of all river-gods and water nymphs.

Odysseus, the hero of the Odyssey, commonly called Ulysses.

Oedipus, king of Thebes, son of Laius and Jocasta, who unwittingly murdered his father and married his mother. An oracle had foretold that the son of Laius, if he should reach manhood, would be the slayer of his father. Therefore, as soon as the boy was born, he was ordered to be put to death, but Jocasta gave the child to a servant, who carried him to Mount Cithaeron. There he was discovered by a shepherd and brought up as his own child. After he had grown to manhood, he chanced to meet his father one day, who was driving along in his chariot. The road being narrow, the king ordered the stranger to make way for him. Oedipus refused, and in the encounter that ensued Laius was slain by his own son, as the oracle had predicted. Proceeding to Thebes, Oedipus found the population of the city threatened with destruction by the Sphinx, a monster sent by Juno, which proposed to all passers-by a riddle and destroyed those who failed to solve it. The kingdom and the hand of the queen were offered to whoever might find the solution and thereby free the people from the monster. Oedipus guessed the riddle. He became king and married his own mother, thus fulfilling the prophecy. Later, Thebes was visited by a plague, and an oracle declared that the epidemic would not cease until the murderer of Laius was discovered. Eventually, Oedipus became aware of his identity. Jocasta hanged herself, and Oedipus put out his eyes. Afterward he left Thebes, accompanied by his daughter Antigone, and died at Colonus, near Athens.

Oenomaus, a son of Mars by Sterope, the daughter of Atlas. He was king of Elis and father of Hippodamia.

Oenone, a nymph whom Paris married and later abandoned for Helen. On account of the indignities which she had suffered, she refused to heal the wound received by him in the battle before Troy. But when his injury proved fatal, she was overcome with remorse and hanged herself.

Olympus, a lofty mountain on the border between Macedonia and Thessaly, which was the abode of the gods.

Omphale, daughter of Jardanus and queen of Lydia, whom Hercules was forced to serve as slave for having murdered his friend Iphitus. She fell in love with him and freed him from slavery.

Oreads, the nymphs that inhabited mountains and caves.

Orestes, son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, who killed his mother and her paramour, Aegisthus, to avenge his father's death. Thereafter he was haunted by the Furies and fled from country to country. Afterward, by Apollo's command, he submitted to trial before the Areopagus at Athens and, being acquitted, returned to Argos and ascended the throne.

Orion, a famous giant and hunter, who asked for the hand of Merope, daughter of Oenopion, king of Chios. As the price of betrothal Oenopion set him the task of clearing the island of wild beasts. This deed Orion quickly accomplished. Instead of receiving his reward, however, he was made drunk and had his eyes put out by the king. Afterward, having recovered his eyesight by facing the rising sun, he took revenge on the king. Orion, after his death, was placed in the sky, where a constellation bears his name.

Orpheus, a famous lyrist, son of Apollo and Calliope, and husband of Eurydice, who received his lyre from Apollo and played upon it so exquisitely that all things, inanimate as well as animate, were charmed. He was one of the heroes of the Argonautic expedition and on his return married Eurydice. After Eurydice had died from the sting of a serpent, Orpheus followed her to Hades and begged Pluto to allow her to accompany him back to earth. His request would be granted, he was told, if he would not look at Eurydice until the borders of Hades had been passed. The temptation was too great however. He looked—and lost her forever. In grief for her he spurned the Thracian women, who became incensed and tore him to pieces during the celebration of the Bacchanalia.

Ossa, a mountain in Thessaly, on which the Giants piled Mount Pelion in order to climb to the heavens.

P

Palamedes, the ambassador sent by the Greek chieftains to urge Ulysses to join the expedition against Troy. Ulysses, pretending to be insane, yoked an ass and an ox to the plow and began to sow his land with salt. In order to test him, Palamedes placed Ulysses' son in the furrow before the plow. He was convinced that Ulysses was sane when he turned the plow aside to avoid striking his son.

Palladium, an image of Pallas Athene at Troy, on which the safety of the city depended; it was stolen by Ulysses and Diomedes.

Pallas, or Pallas Athene, the Greek goddess identified with Minerva.

Pan, the god of woods, fields, and shepherds, son of Mercury and a wood nymph. He is represented as having two small horns, a flat nose, and the lower limbs of a goat. He was very fond of music and enjoyed dancing with the nymphs. But he was also mischievous and frightened people who walked through the forests at night.

Pandora, the first woman ever to have been created, who was intended by Jupiter as a curse for mankind. (Till that time the human race, in some mysterious manner, had survived without the aid of woman.) Because Prometheus had stolen fire from heaven, Jupiter decided to punish man: He created woman. Since to this new work of creation all the gods and goddesses contributed something, it was called Pandora, "The gift of all the gods." Pandora married Epimetheus and presented him with a box given to her by the gods. Although she was forbidden to open it, she nevertheless lifted the cover, and there escaped every kind of human ill and plague, which quickly spread throughout the world. "Hope" alone remained in the box.

Parcae, the goddesses that shaped the destinies of gods and men. They are usually referred to as the Fates and are three in number: Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos.

Paris, son of Priam, whose abduction of Helen, wife of Menelaus, was the cause of the Trojan War. He was brought up as a shepherd and married Oenone, a nymph of Mount Ida. At the marriage of Peleus and Thetis the goddess of discord, Eris, threw a golden apple, inscribed "For the fairest," among the assembled guests. Juno, Venus, and Minerva each claimed the apple, and so Jupiter thought it best to let Paris pass judgment. He decided in favor of Venus, who had promised him the most beautiful woman for a wife. The fairest of women proved to be Helen, the wife of Menelaus. Paris fell in love with her and took her with him to Troy. The Trojan War was the result. After Paris was wounded, he returned to Oenone. But she refused to heal the wound, and Paris died.

Parnassus, a mountain in Phocis, dedicated to the Muses and to Apollo and Bacchus.

Pasiphae, daughter of Helios, wife of Minos, and mother of Ariadne and the Minotaur.

Pasithea, or Aglaia, one of the Graces.

Patroclus, friend of Achilles, who was killed in battle by Hector. When Achilles refused to fight, Patroclus, wearing the armor of his friend, led the Greeks into battle. He fought bravely, but was slain. The desire to avenge his death brought Achilles back into the field.

Pax, the Roman goddess of peace.

Pegasus, the winged horse, which sprang from the blood of the slain Medusa. Mounted on this horse, Bellerophon soared through the air to conquer the Chimaera. Thereafter he wanted to scale the heavens on the back of Pegasus, but the horse threw him and flew up to Olympus alone.

Peleus, son of Aeacus and father of Achilles, who married the Nereid Thetis.

Pelias, father of Alcestis and uncle of Jason, who, having received the crown from his brother during the minority of Jason, refused later to surrender his authority. To prevent Jason from seizing the throne, he sent him in search of the Golden Fleece. When Pelias had grown old, his daughters requested Medea to rejuvenate their father. Medea consented, realizing that this would be the means of getting revenge. As a preliminary act in rejuvenation, she persuaded them, it was necessary for them to kill their father. But instead of restoring the old man to youth, she fled the country.

Pelion, a mountain of Thessaly. In their wars against the gods, the Giants placed Pelion on Mount Ossa to scale the heavens with greater ease.

Pelops, son of Tantalus, who was slaughtered by his father and served up to the gods. He was later restored to life, while Tantalus was sent to Tartarus. He won Hippodamia as his bride by defeating her father, Oenomaus, in a chariot race, in which death awaited the loser. The son of Pelops and Hippodamia was Atreus.

Penelope, wife of Ulysses, who was besieged by more than a hundred suitors during her husband's absence at Troy. She firmly believed that Ulysses would return and therefore delayed a decision as long as possible. Finally she promised to make a choice when she had completed a certain robe which she was then weaving. By undoing at night what she had woven during the day, she was able to put off the suitors until Ulysses returned.

Penthesilea, queen of the Amazons, killed at Troy by Achilles.

Pentheus, king of Thebes, who was killed by his mother, Agave, and her sisters during a celebration in honor of Bacchus.

Persephone, the Greek form of Proserpina.

Perseus, son of Jupiter and Danae and husband of Andromeda, who was sent by Polydectes to kill the monster Medusa. Obtaining winged shoes and Pluto's helmet, which rendered him invisible, he flew to the land of the Gorgons. He found them asleep, cut off Medusa's head, and flew away with it to Seriphus. There, by means of the magic Gorgon's head, he turned Polydectes and his court into stone.

Phaedra, daughter of Minos, who married Theseus after he had deserted her sister Ariadne. She fell in love with Hippolytus, the son of Theseus by Antiope, but was rejected by him.

Phaethon, son of Apollo, who was killed while driving his father's chariot across the sky.

Philemon, husband of Baucis, who was changed into a tree.

Phoebus, an epithet applied to Apollo.

Phryxus, son of Athamas and Nephele, who with his sister Helle rode through the air on the back of the golden ram.

Pleiades, daughters of Atlas, who, being pursued by Orion, appealed to the gods for help. Jupiter transformed them into doves and placed them among the stars.

Pluto, son of Cronus and Rhea and brother of Jupiter, to whom was assigned the kingdom of the lower world. His queen was Proserpina, the daughter of Ceres, whom he seized and carried off to the world below. Pluto is known also as Hades.

Pollux, son of Jupiter and Leda and twin brother of Castor, who was known for his skill in boxing.

Polyhymnia, the Muse of sacred poetry and song.

Polyphemus, son of Neptune and the most renowned of the Cyclopes, who was the rival of Acis for the affections of Galatea. When Ulysses with twelve of his companions entered his cave, Polyphemus devoured six of the men. Later, while Polyphemus was asleep, Ulysses put out his eye—the lone, huge eye in the middle of his forehead.

Poseidon, the Greek god of the sea, identified with Neptune.

Priam, king of Troy, husband of Hecuba, and father of Hector and Paris. In the fighting before Troy, he was killed by Neoptolemus.

Priapus, a Roman god of fertility.

Prometheus, a Titan, who stole fire from heaven for the benefit of mankind. For his crime he was chained by Jupiter to a rock on Mount Caucasus, where an eagle kept tearing at his liver until he was rescued by Hercules.

Proserpina, daughter of Ceres, wife of Pluto, and queen of the nether world. One day as she was playing with her companions, Pluto saw her and took her with him to the realm of the dead.

Proteus, a soothsayer who lived in a cave on the island of Pharos. He could be made to utter his prophecies only while asleep, since at other times he had the power of changing his shape so that he could not be recognized.

Psyche, a nymph whom Cupid married and visited nightly, concealing his features from her and leaving before dawn. She contrived to see him one night, however. Lighting her lamp, she was enraptured with his beauty. He was awakened by a drop of oil which fell on his face, and he fled immediately. Thereafter she wandered in search of him, incurring the hatred of Venus, who tried to thwart the lovers. Psyche ultimately joined Cupid in heaven and was endowed with immortality.

Pygmalion, a sculptor who carved an ivory statue of a woman and, falling in love with it, appealed to Venus to breathe life into it. The statue came to life and the woman, who was named Galatea, loved and married Pygmalion.

Pylades, friend of Orestes and husband of Electra.

Pyrrha, wife of Deucalion.

Pyrrhus, another name for Neoptolemus.

Python, the famous serpent of the caves of Mount Parnassus, which was slain by Apollo. It was born of the mud left by the Deluge.

R

Remus, twin brother of Romulus.

Rhadamanthus, son of Jupiter and Europa, who at his death was appointed one of the three judges in Hades, Minos and Aeacus being the other two.

Rhea, goddess of the earth, wife of Saturn, and mother of Jupiter.

Romulus, twin brother of Remus, son of the vestal virgin Sylvia. His mother was condemned to be buried alive. The children, set adrift on the Tiber, were rescued and suckled by a she-wolf. Afterward Romulus and Remus founded a city, named Rome in honor of Romulus.

S

Saturn, the god of agriculture, identified with the Greek Cronos, a son of Uranus and Terra, who usurped his father's kingdom, his brothers assenting on condition that he would not bring up any male children. Saturn, therefore, devoured his sons as soon as they were born, but his wife, Rhea, concealed from her husband her sons Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto and gave him large stones to swallow instead of her male offspring. It was this that led to the Titans' making war upon Saturn and his ultimate overthrow by his son Jupiter.

Satyrs, rustic divinities addicted to sensual pleasure and associated with the worship of Bacchus.

Scylla, a rock near the Italian coast in the Strait of Messina, dangerous to mariners. In avoiding this peril, a boat was often drawn into Charybdis, a dangerous whirlpool near the opposite shore.

Selene, goddess of the moon.

Semele, daughter of Cadmus and mother of Bacchus. Hera, jealous of Jupiter's love, persuaded Semele to ask him to come to her in his true form. By the lightning, in which he came, Semele was killed, but she gave birth to Bacchus, whom Jupiter kept alive by enclosing him in his thigh till it was time for the child to be born.

Sibyls, women with the gift of prophecy, one of whom compiled the Sibylline Books, which were kept in Rome.

Silenus, a jovial old Satyr, companion of Bacchus.

Sirens, sea nymphs who by their song lured all who heard them to their death.

Sisyphus, son of Aeolus, who was punished in the underworld by having to roll uphill a huge rock, which, as soon as it reached the top, always rolled down again.

Sol, the sun-god.

Somnus, god of sleep and father of Morpheus.

Styx, the chief river of the underworld.

T

Tantalus, a son of Jupiter, who, for revealing his father's secrets, was punished in Tartarus with a raging thirst. Water and fruits that he saw close at hand always receded from his grasp.

Tartarus, the depths of Hades.

Telemachus, son of Ulysses and Penelope.

Tereus, a Thracian king, who married Procne, daughter of Pandion of Athens, and later abandoned her to marry her sister Philomela, whose tongue he cut out. But the sisters communicated with each other; and Procne killed her son Itys and served up his flesh to Tereus. The sisters fled, pursued by Tereus. They were changed by the gods into birds: Procne became a swallow, Philomela a nightingale, and Tereus a hawk.

Terpsichore, the Muse of choral song and dance.

Tethys, daughter of Uranus and wife of Oceanus.

Thalia, the Muse of Comedy; also one of the Graces.

Themis, one of the Titans, goddess of law and justice, who was mother by Jupiter of the Fates and the Hours.

Theseus, son of Aegeus, king of Athens, and legendary hero of Attica. His most famous exploit was the slaying of the Minotaur. He went to Crete as one of the youths whom the Athenians sent annually to Minos. Ariadne, daughter of Minos, fell in love with him, and with her help he slew the Minotaur and escaped from the labyrinth. He took Ariadne away with him but deserted her in the island of Naxos. Among his other adventures were the battle with the Amazons, whose queen he seized, and the carrying off of Helen from Sparta to Athens, whence she was rescued by Castor and Pollux. His friendship with Pirithous was proverbial.

Thetis. (See Peleus.)

Thisbe, the sweetheart of Pyramus, whose parents objected to her love affair. The lovers, consequently, arranged to meet secretly one day at the tomb of Ninus. As Thisbe reached the place, she saw a lion and fled, letting fall her cloak. When Pyramus arrived and found the torn garment, he thought she had been murdered; and therefore he killed himself. Thereafter Thisbe returned and, at the sight of her dead lover, put an end to her life also.

Tiresias, a Theban, whom the gods blinded and, in compensation for the loss of his sight, gave the power of prophecy.

Titans, a race of giants, who waged ten years' war with Jupiter and were ultimately conquered and imprisoned in a cavern near Tartarus.

Tithonus, son of Laomedon and brother of Priam, for whom his wife, Aurora, secured immortality, but not eternal youth. In consequence, he gradually shriveled up.

Triton, a divinity of the sea, son of Neptune, who calmed the waves by blowing his trumpet.

Turnus, an Italian prince, who opposed Aeneas' settlement in Italy and was killed by him in battle.

Tyndareus, husband of Leda.

U

Ulysses, son of Laertes, husband of Penelope, and king of Ithaca. The wildest of the Greek leaders at Troy, he was the inventor of the wooden horse. His wanderings home from Troy, which form the subject of Homer's Odyssey, lasted twenty years. Finally he reached home and killed the suitors by whom Penelope had been surrounded during his absence.

Uranus, god of the heavens, husband of Earth, who was dethroned by his son Saturn.

V

Venus, goddess of love and daughter of Jupiter and Dione. According to later legend she was born of the foam of the sea. She received the beauty prize in the judgment of Paris. Cupid was her son.

Vesta, the goddess of the hearth.

Vulcan, god of fire and son of Jupiter and Juno, who made the armor of the gods and had his workshops in volcanic mountains.

Z

Zephyrus, the west wind.

Zeus, the Greek name for Jupiter.

ENGLISH is one of the richest languages in the world. Its ancestor, Anglo-Saxon, was augmented at the time of the Norman Conquest by a veritable wealth of Old French words, themselves derived from Latin, and during the Renaissance received a large influx of pure Greek and Latin words. Since that time many other foreign words have been adopted, being fitted more smoothly into the English language by changes in spelling and pronunciation. But there are other foreign words which, although used by writers of English, have retained their original form intact; the student or author should know them, since for one reason or another they have proved extremely useful. Some of these foreign phrases express a certain idea more concisely than could any combination of English words—"The Greeks had a word for it," as the saying goes. Others have a historical flavor and significance that would be lost if they were Anglicized. Phrases such as coup d'état, tour de force, bête noire, vox populi, status quo, and raison d'être are in common use today. Latin and Greek phrases also appear frequently as mottoes and inscriptions, such as semper fidelis, requiescat in pace, labor omnia vincit, mens sana in corpore sano, and nemo me impune lacessit. The following dictionary of foreign words and phrases is intended to enrich the appreciation of the student and general reader, and to provide a ready answer for many oft-recurring questions.

MODERN ENGLISH USAGE

This section is designed to point out some of the basic grammatical terms necessary for correct speech and writing. In addition, rules are given for the proper use of those forms of pronouns and verbs which are usually most troublesome.

The Parts of Speech

All words belong to one of eight categories, called the parts of speech. Every good dictionary indicates to which of these categories a word belongs. The parts of speech are the following:

NOUN. The name of a person, place, thing, or idea.

Nouns may be classified as follows:

- a) Common: the name used to identify any object in general, such as man, flower, dog, house, etc.
- b) Proper: the name of a specific person, place, or thing, such as Washington, Walt Whitman, Statue of Liberty.
- c) Abstract: the name of that which is perceived through the intellect, such as virtue, justice, morality.
- d) Concrete: the name of that which has a physical existence and is perceived through the senses, such as man, desk, machine, etc.
- e) Collective: the name of a class composed of many individual parts, such as government, company, crowd, congress, faculty, jury, etc.

PRONOUN. A word that takes the place of a noun.

Pronouns may be classified as follows:

- a) Personal: I, thou, you, he, she, it, we, ye, you, they.
- b) Demonstrative: this, that, these, those.
- c) Relative: who, whose, whom, which, that.
- d) Indefinite: anyone, each, both, someone, either, etc.
- e) Interrogative: who, whose, whom, what, which.
- f) Reflexive: myself, yourself, himself, herself, itself, etc.

g) Intensive: myself, yourself, himself, herself, etc. The reflexive and intensive pronouns have the same forms; the distinction in function is determined by their position in the sentence. Thus, in the sentence "I wash myself," myself is a reflexive pronoun; whereas, in the sentence "I myself do the washing," myself is an intensive pronoun.

h) Reciprocal: each other, one another.

VERB. A word that indicates an action or state of being. Verbs permit of the following classification:

- a) Transitive verbs have their meaning completed by a direct object. In the sentence, "He threw the ball," threw is a transitive verb, and ball the direct object.
- b) Intransitive verbs cannot take a direct object. In the sentence, "The man walks slowly," walks is an intransitive verb and slowly is an adverb.
- c) Copulative verbs (linking verbs) link a subject with a predicate noun or adjective, are usually restricted to a form of the verb to be, and are sometimes classified as intransitive verbs because they cannot take an object. In "Art is life," "Men are mortal," the copulas are is and are respectively, because they link art to life, and men to mortal.

Verbs show the following characteristics:

- a) Mood indicates the manner in which the action takes place. Moods can be classified as:
 - 1) Indicative: expresses a simple fact, declarative or interrogative.
It is cold.
Are you going?
 - 2) Imperative: expresses a command or request.
Sit down.
Please don't go.
 - 3) Subjunctive: expresses doubt, exhortation, wish, permission, supposition, expectation, possibility, condition contrary to fact, intention.

If I were you, I should do it.

Would that it were so.

He may go to the theatre tonight, but I doubt that he will.

- 4) Conditional: expresses contingency, the verbal phrases being formed with should and would. This mood is sometimes regarded as a function of the subjunctive.
- b) Tense indicates the time of an action. The simple tenses, present, past, and future, merely indicate the time of an action; the compound tenses, present perfect, past perfect, and future perfect, indicate the extent to which an action was completed. The emphatic forms occur only in the simple present and past tenses, and are used to give emphasis to a statement. The progressive forms occur in all simple and compound tenses to show continuity of action at the time of reference.
- c) Voice indicates the manner in which the action of the verb is related to the subject. When the subject is acting, the voice is active; when the subject is acted upon, the voice is passive.
- d) Number indicates whether the subject of the verb refers to one person or thing, singular, or more than one, plural.
- e) Person, first, second, third, is indicated by the inflectional ending of the verb; I call, he calls.

Verbals are verb forms which have the function of a noun or adjective. In the sentence, "To walk is pleasant," the infinitive to walk has the function of a noun, and is the subject of the verb is. In the sentence, "Walking is pleasant," the gerund walking has the function of a noun, and is the subject of the verb is. In the sentence, "Seizing the opportunity, he rode to popularity," the participle seizing has the function of an adjective, modifying he.

ADVERB. A word that modifies a verb, adjective, or another adverb. Adverbs may be classified as follows:

- a) Time: answers the question when? In the sentence, "It rained yesterday," yesterday is an adverb of time.
- b) Place: answers the question where? In the sentence, "The men marched forward," forward is an adverb of place or direction.
- c) Manner: answers the question how? In the sentence, "It rained hard," hard is an adverb of manner.

ADJECTIVE. A word that modifies a noun or pronoun. Adjectives may be classified as follows:

- a) Limiting: the definite article the, and the indefinite articles a, an.
- b) Descriptive: denotes condition or quality, as a red building, a good deed, an upright man, etc.
- c) Pronominal: derived from pronouns.
 - 1) Possessive: my, his, her, its, our, your, their.
 - 2) Demonstrative: this, that, these, those.
 - 3) Interrogative: what, which, whose.
 - 4) Relative: which, whose.
 - 5) Indefinite: neither, some, every, each, other, etc.
- d) Numeral
 - 1) Cardinal: one, two, three, etc.
 - 2) Ordinal: first, second, third, etc.

PREPOSITION. A word that expresses the relation of a noun or pronoun to some other word in the sentence. The noun or pronoun governed by the preposition is always in the objective case. Hence, it is wrong to say "Between you and I," because I is a nominative form; the correct form is the objective me, because the pronoun is the object of the preposition between. The preposition and its object constitute a prepositional phrase. Prepositional phrases may be used as adjectives or adverbs. In the sentence, "He has a pot of gold," the prepositional phrase of gold is used as an adjective to modify the noun pot; in the sentence, "The book lies on the table," the prepositional phrase on the table is used as an adverb to modify the verb lies.

CONJUNCTION. A word that connects words, phrases, or clauses. Conjunctions may be classified as:

- a) Coordinating: connects words, phrases, or independent clauses.
 - 1) Pure conjunctions: and, but, or, for.
 - 2) Correlatives: either . . . or, neither . . . nor, not only . . . but also, both . . . and, etc.
 - 3) Conjunctive adverbs: hence, consequently, besides, moreover, therefore, nevertheless, etc.
- b) Subordinating: introduces a subordinate clause, and connects it with the main clause.
 - 1) Those that introduce adjectival clauses: who, which, that.
 - 2) Those that introduce adverbial clauses: although, because, since, though, if, as if, etc.
 - 3) Those that introduce noun clauses: that.

INTERJECTION. An exclamatory word that expresses strong or sudden feeling, having no grammatical function in the construction of a sentence: ah, alas, oh, bah, pshaw, etc.

Sentence Structure

A simple sentence is the expression of a single thought. It may also be defined as an independent clause. (A clause is a group of words containing a subject and a predicate.)

The first reports came at eleven o'clock.

A compound sentence is formed by joining two or more simple sentences, or at least two independent clauses.

We waited all evening, but the first reports did not come until eleven.

A complex sentence consists of one independent clause and one or more dependent clauses. (Dependent clauses do not make complete statements; they do the work of an adverb, adjective, or noun.)

Although we waited all evening, we did not receive a report until eleven o'clock. (The clause introduced by although is adverbial.)

The compound-complex sentence.

The men who were chosen were excellent players; they had had a great deal of experience, and they worked well together.

In the above sentence there are three independent clauses, and one dependent, who were chosen, which is an adjectival clause.

Writers without much experience often use a compound sentence when a complex would be more effective, that is, when one of the parts of the sentence is really subordinate to the other in thought. For example: "I was very tired, and so I went to bed early," might be written "Because I was very tired, I went to bed early." Good writers vary the sentence structure to gain emphasis and to avoid monotony.

SENTENCE ANALYSIS.—Every clause consists of a subject (the thing talked about), a verb or predicate (which makes a statement about the subject), and when the verb is not complete, an object (with a transitive verb) or a predicate noun or adjective (with a linking verb). The remaining words in the clause are modifiers of one of these elements.

The old house which we purchased from Mr. Jones has been a constant source of expense.

This is a complex sentence. The independent or main clause is The old house has been a constant expense. The dependent clause is which we purchased from Mr. Jones.

In the independent clause house is the subject. It is modified by the adjectives the and old and by the adjectival clause which we purchased from Mr. Jones. Has been is the verb. Source is the predicate noun and it is modified by the adjectives a and constant.

In the adjectival clause, we is the subject; purchased is a transitive verb modified by the prepositional phrase (used like an adverb) from Mr. Jones; which is the direct object.

They promised us that the boat would be ready, and having done business with them before, we accepted their promise.

This is a compound-complex sentence, consisting of two independent clauses connected by and, and one dependent clause, that the boat would be ready.

In the first independent clause, they is the subject; promised is the transitive verb; the noun clause that the boat would be ready is the direct object; us is the indirect object.

In the second independent clause, we is the subject, modified by the adjective-participial phrase having done business with them before; accepted is the verb; promise is the object, modified by the possessive adjective, their.

In the dependent noun clause, boat is the subject, modified by the; would be is the linking verb; ready is the predicate adjective; that is used only to introduce the clause.

In the participial phrase, the verbal having done has an object, business, and an adverbial modifier, the phrase with them.

It is possible, then, to account for the use of every word in any sentence.

DECLENSION OF THE NOUN

	Singular	Plural
NOMINATIVE	dog	dogs
POSSESSIVE	dog's	dogs'
OBJECTIVE	dog	dogs
NOMINATIVE	man	men
POSSESSIVE	man's	men's
OBJECTIVE	man	men

THE CORRECT USE OF PRONOUNS.—Because pronouns have different forms for each of the three cases in the English inflectional system, they offer more difficulty than perhaps any other part of speech. People are often puzzled about the use of who and whom; they are uncertain whether everyone is singular or plural. It is to meet these questions that the following rules are given.

CASES OF PRONOUNS

NOMINATIVE CASE	Used for the subject or predicate nominative.
POSSESSIVE CASE	Used to indicate ownership.
OBJECTIVE CASE	Used for the objects of verbs and prepositions.

DECLENSION OF THE PRONOUN

Personal

First Person, Masculine and Feminine

	Singular	Plural
NOMINATIVE	I	we
POSSESSIVE	*my, mine	*our, ours
OBJECTIVE	me	us

Second Person, Masculine and Feminine

RULES FOR USE OF PRONOUNS

1. Use the Nominative Case as the subject of a finite verb.

"He is taller than I." I is the subject of am (understood).

"Explain the situation to whoever comes first." Whoever is the subject of comes, not the object of the preposition to.

"He is the man who we believe should be elected." Who is the subject of should be elected, not the object of believe.

2. Use the Nominative Case after the various forms of the linking verb be (was, were, is, are, have been, etc.)

"It was he who called."

"The leaders were Tom, Dick, Harry, John, and I."

"We are certain it is they."

3. Use the Possessive Case to modify a gerund.

"We objected to his leaving."

"Dick's losing the ball stopped the game."

"I am certain of their having been there."

4. Use the Objective Case for the object of a verb.

"I invited Mary and him."

"She likes John better than me." Me is the object of she likes (understood).

"Whom did you see?" Whom is the object of did see.

"Give the dictionary to whomever you see."

Whomever is the object of see.

5. Use the Objective Case for the object of a preposition.

"She gave the dictionary to Helen and me."

"They were all there except him."

"Three of us boys went camping in Wisconsin."

PRONOUNS—NUMBER

Use a singular pronoun to refer to the indefinite words anyone, either, everyone, each, every, nobody.

"Everyone should have his own dictionary."

"Each one of the girls read her essay."

"If anyone wishes help, he must ask for it."

"Neither of the boys could express his ideas."

AGREEMENT OF SUBJECT AND VERB

1. Use a singular verb with a singular subject. "Mary doesn't like to work." Don't would be wrong in this sentence. Do not say he don't, she don't, it don't, because these are contractions of he do not, she do not, it do not.

"Each of the boys is capable in his own way." Each is singular.

"Neither Tom nor Peter is eligible."

When the two parts of the subject are joined by nor, or, but, the verb agrees in number with the noun or pronoun nearest to it.

"Every member of the committee agrees to the proposal."

"John, together with his companion, is here." John, alone, is the subject of this sentence.

2. Use a plural verb with a plural subject.

"There are several varieties of apples in the basket." Varieties is the subject of are. "Applause and flattery are the breath of his existence." A compound subject, i.e., two words joined by and, requires a plural verb unless the two words designate the same person or thing, as in the sentence: "His guide and protector is Mr. Collins."

3. Collective nouns (words like group, crowd, committee, choir, faculty, congress) may take either a singular or plural verb according to the meaning intended.

"The company has been ordered to the coast." Company is here thought of as a unit.

"The company are not all willing to take the risk." Here company is considered as plural because several individuals are meant.

Capitalization

Capital letters are employed to give emphasis to particular words, namely proper nouns and proper adjectives. The difficulty in this principle lies in determining when a noun or adjective is proper, and when a noun or adjective is common. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to list here an exhaustive set of rules to cover every instance. The following rules, however, will be found helpful insofar as they do apply to problems in capitalization met daily.

1. Capitalize the first word (a) of a sentence, (b) of a direct quotation, (c) of a line of poetry, or (d) of a formally introduced series of items or phrases following a colon.

a) The room was uncomfortably warm.
b) Turning quickly she said, "Please go now."

c) Then I felt like some watcher of the skies,
When a new planet swims into his ken:

Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes

He stared at the Pacific—and all his men

Look'd at each other with wild surmise—

Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

d) The analysis revealed the following:
Carbon, six parts; hydrogen, twelve parts; oxygen, six parts.

The first word of a fragmentary quotation is not capitalized.

He thought the play "was good, but amateurish."

The first word following a colon is not capitalized if that which follows merely expands, qualifies, or makes clearer the sense of that which precedes the colon.

Intelligence cannot be acquired or increased: it is native.

History shows that wars settle nothing: they merely unsettle things.

2. Capitalize the interjection O, but none of the other interjections.

O powerful western fallen star!

O shades of night—O moody, tearful night!

O great star disappear'd—O the black murk that hides the star!

O cruel hands that hold me powerless—O helpless soul of me!

O harsh surrounding cloud that will not free my soul.

3. Capitalize all proper nouns.

Bohemia

China

America

Louis Pasteur

King Philip of Macedon

John Macadam

Adam

4. Words derived from proper nouns, and retaining a proper meaning are capitalized.

Bohemian (of Bohemia)

American (of America)

Venetian (of Venice)

Moroccan (of Morocco)

Parisian (of Paris)

a. Do not capitalize words derived from proper nouns for which a common or specialized meaning has been developed.

china	anglicize
morocco	pasteurize
venetian blinds	philippic
plaster of paris	macadam

5. Capitalize common nouns and adjectives which form an essential part of a proper name, as of streets, parks, specific buildings, geographical names, etc.

Chestnut Street	Delaware River
Franklin Parkway	Blair County
Michigan Avenue	Mount Everest
Cermak Road	Gulf of Mexico
Fairmount Park	Panama Canal
Elverson Building	Chesapeake Bay

a. Do not capitalize descriptive place references:

the valley of the Nile
the river Seine
the gorge of the Colorado

b. The following are never capitalized:

aqueduct	lock
breakwater	pier
buoy	slip
dike	spillway
ditch	tunnel
drydock	watershed
floodway	weir
levee	wharf

c. The following are always capitalized when they follow a proper name:

Archipelago	Harbor
Bay	Highway
Bayou	Hill
Borough	Hook
Canal (for ships)	Inlet
Canyon	Island
Cape	Isle
Channel	Lake
County	Mount
Creek	Mountain
Desert	Narrows
Falls	Peninsula
Forest	Plateau
Fork (stream)	River
Fort	Sea
Gap	Sound
Glacier	Spring
Gulch	Valley
Gulf	Woods

6. Capitalize the d', da, della, van, and von when not preceded by a title or forename.

De Maupassant, but Guy de Maupassant
Van Gogh, but Vincent van Gogh
Von Tirpitz, but Alfred von Tirpitz
Della Robbia, but Luca della Robbia

a. In American and British names these particles are usually capitalized without regard to the above rule, but individual usage should be followed.

William De Morgan
Thomas De Quincey
Lucretia Van Zandt
Henry van Dyke (his usage)

7. Capitalize the names of organized bodies and their members to distinguish them from the common meaning.

Republican Party, a Republican; but, a republican (one who believes in a republican form of government).
Democratic Party, a Democrat; but, a democrat (one who believes in democracy).
an Elk; but, an elk (an animal.)

8. Capitalize territory, state, nation, union, empire, etc. only when these words refer to a particular political division.

the United States: the Republic, the Nation, the Union; but a republic, a nation, a union.
the British Empire: the Empire; but an empire.
Cook County: the County; but a county.

9. Capitalize descriptive terms used to designate a definite geographical region or feature.

the Middle Atlantic States
the Far East; the Near East
the Continental Divide
the North Pole; the South Pole
the Western Hemisphere

10. Capitalize names of months and days of the year.

January	Sunday
February	Monday
March, etc.	Tuesday, etc.

11. Capitalize names of historic events and eras, holidays, and ecclesiastical feast and fast days.

World War	Renaissance
Mexican War	Fourth of July
Middle Ages	Shrove Tuesday

12. Capitalize personification in figures of speech.

For Nature is neither kind nor cruel, merciless nor merciful; she follows inexorably her immutable laws.
The Chair introduced the guest speaker.

13. Capitalize all nouns and adjectives denoting the Deity, and all pronouns referring to the same.

the Holy Ghost	Jehovah
the Lord	Yahweh
the Almighty	Allah
Son of Man	the Virgin

14. Capitalize all names of creeds, religious bodies and their adherents.

Nicene Creed	Methodist Church
Augsburg Con- fession	Protestant
Christian	Buddhist
	Mohammedan

15. Capitalize all names for the Bible, books of the Bible, and all other sacred books.

Holy Writ	the Koran
Scriptures	the Vedas
Exodus	the Upanishads
Septuagint	the Talmud

a. Do not capitalize adjectives derived from such nouns.

apocryphal	scriptural koranic	biblical

16. Capitalize all titles preceding a name.

Doctor Smith	King George
Professor Gibbs	General Butler
President Truman	Justice Roberts

a. Capitalize a title in the second or third person.

Your Honor	Mr. President
Your Grace	Mr. Chairman
His Holiness	His Excellency

17. Capitalize the first word and every important word in the English title of a book, poem, play, article, essay, work of art, piece of music, report, publication, legal case, and historic document.

The Dawn of Civilization (book)
Caliban in the Coal Mines (poem)
Pillars of Society (drama)
Old Lamps for New (essay)
Dinner for Threshers (painting)
Death and Transfiguration (music)

Punctuation

The purpose of punctuation is to aid the reader in assimilating the thought expressed through the written word.

Although very little conscious thought is given to punctuation in the actual reading of printed or written matter—the mind automatically stopping at periods, pausing for commas, and preparing for a change of thought at dashes—a thorough knowledge of the fundamental rules governing the correct use of punctuation marks is indispensable to the writer who wishes to express his thoughts, ideas, and feelings clearly, accurately, and logically.

The following rules will be found to embrace all cases arising in the course of ordinary formal and informal writing.

1. When reading, notice all punctuation closely and try to reason out why the marks encountered are used.

2. When writing, first organize in your mind what you want to say and then use only sufficient punctuation to insure the accurate conveyance of your thoughts.

3. Never use any mark of punctuation without a definite reason for so doing.

4. Give particular attention to the use of the comma, as ignorance of the rules governing this mark is the major cause of punctuation trouble.

THE COMMA.—The function of the comma is to break up the sentence into separate thoughts in the interest of clarity and ease of reading.

1. Use a comma between each element of pairs and series unless the pairs are connected by a coordinating conjunction.

The ride was long, exhausting.

The ride was long, hot, exhausting.

The ride was long and exhausting.

2. Use a comma before the and in a series having the form of a, b, and c.

We brought ham, pickles, and eggs.

3. Use a comma before any one of the conjunctions (and, but, for, or, neither, nor) when it joins a pair of main clauses.

He said he would be there, and I do not doubt his word.

Many are called, but few are chosen.

He read the book quickly, for he was late.

She will be there, or I am mistaken.

4. Use a comma to introduce a short, direct quotation in the form of a complete sentence and also at the end of a quotation if it is followed by explanatory, unquoted remarks. (Introducing a direct quotation with a colon is permissible if the quoted sentence is long.)

The cynic replied, "Diplomacy is the art of lying."

"Diplomacy is the art of lying," replied the cynic.

"Diplomacy," replied the cynic, "is the art of lying."

5. Use a comma before and after such elements as for example, to be sure, in fact, however, nevertheless, and therefore, when they are used parenthetically.

We do not, for example, favor a moratorium.

He was, in fact, unequal to the work.

She will go, therefore, at six o'clock.

6. Use commas to enclose a geographical name explaining a preceding geographical name.

They lived in Chicago, Illinois, for many years.

7. Use commas to enclose a date explaining a preceding date.

In April, 1918, his regiment moved to the front.

On April 24, 1918, his regiment moved to the front.

Early in the morning of Monday, April 24, his regiment moved to the front.

8. Use commas to enclose any element taken from its natural position and placed elsewhere.

Their new car, when running at top speed, will go faster than 90 miles an hour.

9. Use a comma between the parts of a name or phrase when they are written in reverse order.

Buchanan, James B.
Psychology, History of Nouns, Use of Chemistry, Organic

10. Enclose appositives with commas.

U. S. Grant, the great Civil War general, was short in stature.

11. Enclose absolute phrases with commas.

It is my belief, conditions being what they are, that war is inevitable.

12. Use a comma to separate two words or figures that might otherwise be confusing.

To Henry, Scott was a hero.
In 1939, 40 ships were lost.
January 24, 1939.
Instead of 10, 25 men answered the call for volunteers.

13. Use a comma to indicate the omission of a word.

He is tall; she, short.
The former illustrates the use of a semicolon; the latter, a comma.

14. Use a comma after a phrase or subordinate clause that precedes a main clause.

Caught on a reef, the vessel foundered and was lost.
Although a severe winter had been anticipated, we were pleasantly surprised by its mildness.

a. Do not use a comma after a main clause if the following adverbial clause is its logical completion.

This testimony is inadmissible because it is prejudicial.

The project can be completed only if all cooperate.

15. Use a comma between two of the same or similar words to avoid confusion.

That which is, is neither good nor bad.
That which was, is no more.
What will be, will be.

16. Use a comma before the abbreviations or degrees Jr., Sr., M.A., M.D., Ph.D., etc.

Charles H. Leiter, Jr.
Anthony Ennis, M.D.
D.S. Platon, Ph.D.

17. Use a comma to separate thousands, millions, billions, etc. in numbers of four or more digits.

3,197	3,284,962
52,012	653,039,253

a. Do not use a comma in figures of four or more digits in telephone numbers, serial numbers, dates, and radio wave lengths.

Murray Hill 9912
A.D. 1925
No. F87831084 A
1170 kilocycles; 820 meters

18. Use a comma after a title or phrase in direct address.

Sir, the end is not yet.
Mr. President, the gentleman is out of order.
Gentlemen, we shall now proceed to the order of the day.

19. Use a comma between title and name of organization where of or the has been omitted.

Commander, Fourth Army Corps
President, University of Chicago
Superintendent, Board of Health

THE DASH.—The dash may often be substituted for the comma, semicolon, colon, or parenthesis mark. It is used to enclose or introduce short elements and has great force. It should be used only in extreme cases, when other forms of punctuation are inadequate—and only then.

1. Substitute a dash for a semicolon when more effective grouping is desired.

The shouting ceased—all was quiet; evidently the mob had dispersed.

2. The dash may be used to call attention to a word or group of words following it.

He works hard—too hard, in fact.
The American character may be described in one word—courage.

3. The dash is useful at the end of a long series to introduce material concerning that series.

With careful study, with diligent practice, with the desire for improvement—with all these, one should be able to succeed.

4. Use dashes to enclose parenthetical elements where commas would be weak or parentheses undesirable.

Ruth—the best hitter in the league—has powerful shoulders.

He thinks—and rightly—that the disease can be eradicated.

5. Use the dash to indicate an interruption or an unfinished sentence.

He goes on to say that—. But never mind; it's of no importance.

"This thing has be—."

6. Use a dash to link letters, figures, or letters and figures.

DO—X	1938—40
RZ—1	January—March
$5—$10	Monday—Thursday

7. Use a dash when there is repetition for additional or especial emphasis.

We are now faced with a new problem—the problem of isolating the germ.

8. Use a dash for summarizing.

Washington, Jefferson, Jackson—all had the same idea.

THE SEMICOLON.—This mark is used to co-ordinate main clauses.

1. Use the semicolon between pairs of main clauses not connected by a coordinating conjunction (and, but, for, or, neither, nor).

You may help him; I will not.

2. Use the semicolon between pairs of main clauses not connected by a coordinating conjunction especially when a conjunctive adverb (therefore, nevertheless, however, otherwise, etc.) is present.

You may help him; however, I will not.

3. Use the semicolon between pairs of main clauses where a coordinating conjunction is present if such clauses are long, contain commas, or if emphasis is desired.

It is most unusual; and it should not be tolerated.

It is not just to the people, the state, or the country; and although difficult, a proper decision must be made.

4. Use the semicolon to separate statements so closely related that a comma would be too weak and a period too strong.

It was so in the past; it is so in the present; and if the past and the present may be taken as a valid indication of the future, it will always remain so.

THE COLON.—The colon is a mark of punctuation used to introduce a clause or phrase that amplifies or is in explanation of a preceding clause.

1. Use the colon to introduce a clause that supplements or explains the preceding clause in a sentence.

Everett's speech was soon forgotten: he was too much occupied with form rather than substance.

We live on a planet, not on a star: a star is a sun.

2. Use the colon to introduce formally a direct, lengthy quotation, or any other formal matter.

These are his principal qualifications: attention to detail; many years of experience; and an instinctive ability to sell merchandise.

He said: "I do not accept as valid the proposition that time goes. It would not be difficult to demonstrate that time is ageless; and it would also be easy to demonstrate that human beings are not ageless. No, it is we who go, not time."

3. Use the colon to express time.

8:30 A.M.

12:25 P.M.

4. Use the colon after the salutation of a letter.

Dear Sir:

Gentlemen:

My dear Sir:

Dear Madam:

5. Use the colon in biblical and other citations.

Luke 4:7

N. Y. Times, Nov. 20, 21:7

6. Use the colon in proportions.

1:3 : 3:9

The ratio was 16:1.

PARENTHESES

1. Use parentheses to enclose that part of a sentence intended to be read as a side remark provided the removal of such part would not destroy the sense of the context. Also, use parentheses to enclose complete sentences intended as side remarks.

Robert was playing great football (for the thrill of it; not merely to win) and several times staved off defeat. We hurried home the next day. (It was only too true that the river had risen. We were ruined.) But with characteristic vigor we began building anew.

2. Use parentheses to enclose an independent clause inserted in a sentence.

The work (he was preeminently fitted for it) absorbed his attention for weeks.

3. Enclose with parentheses references to tables, diagrams, etc.

The cost of living (See Chart II) has risen slowly but surely.

4. Use parentheses to enclose figures or letters in enumerations.

The immediate results were these:
(1) a cornering of the market, (2) a decrease in available material, (3) an advance in prices.

BRACKETS.—Brackets are used to enclose an explanatory remark in a quoted passage. They are rarely, if ever, used in a business letter. For all practical purposes the secretary can attain the same ends with parentheses.

"The rise of absolutism [Fascism, Hitlerism, etc.] has its roots in post-war conditions," the speaker said.

QUOTATION MARKS

1. Use quotation marks to enclose all direct quotations.

Patrick Henry said, "Give me liberty, or give me death."

2. Use single quotation marks to mark a quotation within a quotation.

The coach said: "I heard one of our men say, 'It was the hardest game of the season.'"

3. When a quotation consists of more than one paragraph, use quotation marks before each paragraph, but at the end of only the last one.

"_____

_____"

4. When quoting poetry consisting of more than one stanza, use quotation marks before each stanza, but at the end of only the last stanza.

"Under the wide and starry sky,
Dig the grave and let me die.
Glad did I live and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.

"This be the verse you grave for me:
Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from sea,
And the hunter home from the hill."
—ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

5. Enclose slang expressions, colloquialisms, technical words, or a word used in a humorous or ironical way, in quotation marks when such expressions are not in keeping with the style of writing in which they occur.

His wife is undoubtedly "Lord High Chancellor of the Exchequer" in their household.
He got himself "all balled up."

6. The comma and period are always placed inside the quotation marks.

"I shall come," she said, "if it does not rain."

The semicolon, exclamation mark, colon, question mark, and dash are all placed outside the quotation marks except when they form part of the quoted passage or when the quotation is not accompanied by such expressions as he said, she replied, etc.

Did she say, "I have lost my book"?
"May I come in now?" he asked.
"They're off!"
"Where?"
"At Latonia."

7. Dialogue should be written in separate paragraphs.

"Come in," she said, "and get warm."
"Thank you," he replied, "it is very cold tonight."

8. Enclose definitions requiring explanation with single quotation marks; for translations use double quotation marks.

Facetious means 'humorous' or 'jocular.'
Verboten means "forbidden."

9. Since there are no italics on a typewriter, quote the names of ships, of musical compositions, of art works, and the titles of books and pictures, or indicate italics by underlining.

The U. S. S. "Pennsylvania"
DaVinci's "The Last Supper"
Theodore Dreiser's An American Tragedy
George Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue

THE PERIOD

1. Use the period at the end of a declarative sentence.

The soft rays of the morning sun illuminated the gold in the ripening wheat.

As the sun began to slip away the mountain underwent a slow progression in color, from warmer to cooler, from green through blue to purple, until a mere outline was left against a dusky sky which finally melted into the darkness of night.

2. Use the period at the end of an imperative sentence.

Hang up your coat.
Come to the fair.
Be there on time.

3. Use the period at the end of an indirect question.

Tell me what he said.
I should like to know how you do it.
I asked him what time it was.

4. Use the period after an abbreviation.

viz.	D. C.
N. Y.	q. v.
etc.	SW.

a. Do not use a period after the symbols for chemical elements.

Ag (silver)	K (potassium)
Au (gold)	O (oxygen)
Fe (iron)	S (sulphur)

b. Do not mistake a contraction for an abbreviation: a contraction is not followed by a period.

ass'n	assn.	sup't	supt.
m'g'r	mgr.	Penn'a	Penn.

5. Do not use a period after Roman numerals except in enumeration used in an outline.

George VI
Haakon VII
Gustavus V

I. The Colonial Period
II. The Ante-Bellum Period
III. The Post-Bellum Period
IV. The Twentieth Century

6. Do not use a period after per cent, MS, MSS.

the Cotton MS (manuscript)
25 per cent

7. Always put the period within quotation marks.

I have read "Leaves of Grass."
He did not see the performance of "Mourning Becomes Electra."

THE EXCLAMATION POINT.—This mark is used at the end of a declarative sentence or after an exclamation within the sentence to convey the idea of strong feeling, surprise, or irony.

Here, get down from there!

What! the only one we have! and

I'm not to use it!

Voting in a totalitarian state is an expression of popular sentiment?

Popular sentiment, indeed!

THE QUESTION MARK

1. Use the question mark at the end of every sentence that asks a question.

How fast are we going?

"How fast are we going?" he asked.

Can there not be such a thing as an absolute event quite independent of cause?

2. Use the question mark within the sentence when it is desirable to emphasize each element separately.

Where now is his love of country? his political integrity? his unblemished record?

3. Use the question mark within parentheses to indicate doubt or uncertainty as to the correctness of the word or fact preceding it.

Charles I, born in 1660 (?), was king of Sicily.

THE APOSTROPHE.—The apostrophe is used to indicate the omission of one or more letters from a word or to form the possessive of certain nouns as indicated in the rules following.

1. Use the apostrophe to indicate the omission of one or more letters from a word, or figures from a number.

I can't do it now.

He wouldn't do it then.

The class of '98 met in Chicago.

2. Use the apostrophe and s to form the possessive of singular nouns of not more than one syllable including those which end in s.

Fred's, James's, Mr. Jones's.

Some writers still use only the apostrophe for the possessive of singular nouns ending in s; but the 's is preferable.

3. Use the apostrophe alone when forming the possessive of plural nouns ending in s, or nouns ending in s and consisting of more than one syllable; add s with the apostrophe in the case of plural nouns which do not end in s.

The Smiths' house.

Girls', soldiers', children's, men's.

The New Testament contains Jesus' parables.

4. Use the apostrophe and s to indicate joint possession.

George and Mary's book.
Chase and Sanborn's coffee.

5. Use the apostrophe and s to form the possessive of indefinite pronouns.

One's, other's, another's, either's.
Somebody else's coat.

The above rule does not apply to its, hers, his, ours, yours, theirs, whose.

6. Use the apostrophe and s to form the plural of a letter, a figure, or of a word used as a noun.

There are two f's in affect.
Your 8's are not legible.
He uses too many if's and but's.

Faulty Expressions

The following glossary of faulty expressions, while by no means exhaustive, is representative of the most common forms of incorrect usage. The secretary should avoid, in business correspondence, obsolete and archaic words, slang and vulgarisms. Although provincialisms and colloquialisms are permissible in conversation, their usage in a business letter detracts from its dignity and effectiveness. Too, the type of English frequently used in newspapers, written in a loose, racy, smart, or sensational style, should not be employed in business correspondence. The English may not be incorrect, but it lacks the character and dignity in keeping with the tone of a business letter, and is, therefore, to be avoided. The expressions listed here are those which are avoided by persons of good training. The secretary will do well to study them carefully.

ACCEPT, EXCEPT. These words should not be confused. Accept means to receive, as I accept your kind offer. Except means to exclude.

The law excepts no one.

A.D. In the year of our Lord. The A.D. should precede the date and never be used with in, since that would be superfluous. Nor should the A.D. be used when speaking of a century.

Wrong: He died in 1865 A.D.
Right: He died A.D. 1865.
Wrong: We live in the 20th century A.D.
Right: We live in the 20th century of the Christian Era.

AD. Colloquialism for advertisement. Although acceptable in speech it should be avoided in formal writing.

Colloq.: Your ad was placed in the Sunday News.

Preferable: Your advertisement was inserted in the Sunday News.

ADAPT, ADEPT. These words are carelessly confused. Adapt is a verb and means to adjust, as He adapted the idea to his own needs. Adept is an adjective and means skilled, as He is adept at figures.

ADVISE. Means to offer an opinion but is frequently used in business correspondence to mean inform or tell. In this sense, inform or tell is preferable to advise.

Permissible: Please be advised that the merchandise has been shipped.

Preferable: We wish to inform you that the merchandise has been shipped.

AFFECT, EFFECT. Affect is always a verb and means to influence, as A high tariff will affect our cotton exports. Effect, as a verb, means to cause, as I want to effect a settlement; as a noun it means result, as Some believe that for every effect there is a cause.

AFTER. This should not be used with a past participle, but may be used with the present participle.

Wrong: After having read the poem, I could appreciate it.

Right: Having read the poem, I could appreciate it.

Or also: After reading the poem, I could appreciate it.

AGGRAVATE. This means to make an already bad condition worse and, though sanctioned by popular usage, should not be used in the sense of irritate, annoy, or provoke.

Popular: His petty behavior aggravated me.

Preferable: His petty behavior irritated me.

AGREE TO, AGREE WITH. These are idiomatic expressions with different meanings. Agree to means to give assent to, as I did not agree to pay that sum of money. Agree with means to be in accord with, as I agree with him in principle, but differ as to method.

AIN'T. This word has been the subject of much controversy, but most authorities agree that it should never be used except in written colloquial dialogue. In its place should be used is it not?, am I not? (but never the British-Hollywood vulgarism aren't I), are we not? etc.

ALL OF. The of is superfluous.

Bad: He gave all of his property to charity.

Better: He gave all his property to charity.

ALL THE FARTHER, HIGHER, FASTER. These are frequently used incorrectly for as far as,

as high as, as fast as. All the is correct when used in the sense of just so much.

Right: Disregarding the warning, we climbed all the higher.

Right: That day we climbed as high as 5,000 feet.

Wrong: Is this all the farther we are going?

ALLOW. The word means to permit, to approve. The provincial meaning to think or believe should be avoided.

Provincial: I allow that's so.

Preferable: I think that is so.

ALLUDE, DELUDE, ELUDE. Allude means to refer to indirectly, as He alluded to unethical practitioners in the profession. Delude means to deceive, as He was deluded by the man's apparent honesty. Elude means to escape, as The gist of the story eludes me.

ALLUSION, ILLUSION. Allusion has the meaning of a casual reference, as There were many humorous allusions to human foibles in the drama. Illusion has the meaning of a false or deceptive appearance, as He lulled himself into a feeling of false security by an illusion of wealth.

ALREADY, ALL READY. Both of these are correct, but each one has a different meaning. Already has the meaning of beforehand or by now, as The merchandise has already arrived. All ready has the meaning of everything or everybody ready, as They are all ready.

ALRIGHT, ALL RIGHT. There is no such word as the former; the latter is the correct spelling and should not be overworked in the sense of very well.

ALTAR, ALTER. The former is a noun and means a shrine, the latter is a verb and means to change.

ALTOGETHER, ALL TOGETHER. Both expressions are correct but have different meanings. The former means wholly, totally; the latter, everybody or everything together.

ALUMNUS, ALUMNI; ALUMNA, ALUMNAE. The first two are the masculine singular and plural forms respectively; the last two are the feminine singular and plural forms respectively.

AMONG, BETWEEN. The former is used of more than two persons, things, or groups, as, You are among friends. The latter is used where there are only two, as This is between you and me.

AND ETC. The and is unnecessary since etc. is the abbreviation of et cetera which means and the rest.

ANXIOUS, EAGER. While both words imply interest, the former carries the added implication of worry, as He is anxious about your health; but He is eager to learn new things.

ANY. Do not use for at all as He has not played any this game. When comparing an object with another in the same class, use any other: "I like roast beef better than any other meat."

ANYHOW. Anyway is to be preferred as an adverb.

ANYPLACE, EVERY PLACE, NO PLACE, SOME-PLACE. These are colloquial expressions and should not be used for anywhere, everywhere, nowhere, and somewhere.

APT, LIABLE, LIKELY. Care should be exercised in the use of these words. Apt means suitable; liable implies damage, danger, expense; likely means probable, suitable.

Wrong: He is liable to go.

Right: He is likely to go.

Or: It is likely that he will go.

APPROPRIATE. To appropriate means to set apart for a special purpose. Do not use for take.

AROUND. Do not use for about in the sense of nearly.

AS . . . AS, SO . . . AS. Use the latter in negative comparisons: "Jane is not so tall as Mary." ASCENT, ASSENT. The former means an upward slope, a climb; the latter, consent.

AT. Vulgar in Where do you work at? Where means at what place.

AUTO. A colloquialism for automobile and should not be used in formal writing.

AWFUL, AWFULLY. Used only to express profound fear or reverence. Never use in the sense of very.

B

BAD, BADLY. The former is an adjective and is properly used with verbs relating to the senses of seeing, feeling, smelling, etc.; the latter is an adverb. Thus, I feel bad means I feel ill; but as an adverb, He limped badly.

BALANCE. Do not use to indicate remainder except in a financial sense.

BEING AS, BEING THAT. Do not use for since, because.

BELONG TO BE. Do not use for should be, ought to be.

BESIDE, BESIDES. Modern usage confines the former to giving the idea of by the side of and the latter to in addition to, moreover.

BIANNUAL, BIENNIAL. The former means twice a year; the latter, once in two years.

BLAME IT ON. Do not use for blame (some one) for.

BOGUS. Slang. Say counterfeit, or false.

BOTH ALIKE. Omit both, "They are alike."

BRAINY. A colloquialism for intelligent.

BUNCH. Colloquial for a group of people.

BUSINESS. Do not use for right, as "He has no right (not business) to go there."

BUT THAT, BUT WHAT. But that means except that: "I have no doubt that I will go (not but that)."
But what is a colloquialism for that or but that. Correctly used in a sentence such as "I will do nothing but what I want to do," since but what means except what.

C

CALCULATE. Use only in a mathematical sense and not in the sense of think or suppose.

CAN, MAY. The former carries the idea of ability; the latter of permission.

CANNOT HELP BUT. Two idioms are confused, can but and cannot help. Help should be followed by a gerund: "He cannot help liking them."

CAN'T HARDLY. Do not use for can hardly.

CAN'T SEEM TO. Do not use for seem not to or seem unable to.

CAPACITY. Do not use for ability.

CAPITAL, CAPITOL. The former refers to the city, the latter to the building.

CASE. Commonly used indiscriminately in place of instance, condition, situation, contingency, etc. Better usage often dictates the choice of the more specific word.

CENSER, CENSOR, CENSURE. The first refers to a vessel for burning incense, the second refers to a person who approves or withholds, and the third to condemnation.

CHARACTERISTIC. Frequently used vaguely. It means that which pertains to or indicates the character, as "Dignity is one of the characteristics of a well-bred person."

CLAIM. Should not be used in the sense of say, assert, maintain. Its specific meaning is to demand as a right (usually in a legal sense).

Loose: He claims he saw it happen.

Better: He says that he saw it happen.

CLEVER. Commonly used for agreeable, good-natured, witty. Use the more specific word.

COINCIDENCE. Means the occurring of two or more events. Do not use of a single event.

COMMON, MUTUAL. The former means belonging to two or more persons; the latter means reciprocal or interchangeable. Do not confuse.

COMPARE TO, WITH. Use the former to imply rivaling, the latter, and more formal expression, to liken two objects of real or supposed resemblance. Thus, one would say, "Compared to the sun the earth is small, but some of the other planets compare favorably in size with the sun."

COMPLEMENT, COMPLIMENT. The former means that which completes a thing or that which is complete; the latter, an expression of praise or delicate flattery. Do not confuse.

CONSCIOUS, CONSCIENCE. Sometimes confused. The former means aware; the latter refers to moral sensibility. Thus, one may be conscious of the distinction between good and evil, but it is one's conscience that decides whether he shall do good or evil.

CONSIDERABLE. Sometimes incorrectly used for considerably, for much, or for a great deal of.

CONTINUAL, CONTINUOUS. Frequently confused. The former means in rapid succession; the latter, without cessation.

CONTRARY. Should not be used for perverse.

CONTRAST FROM. Incorrectly used for contrast to or contrast with.

CORPORAL, CORPOREAL. The former means relating to the body as opposed to the mind; the latter, pertaining to matter or a material body.

CORRESPOND TO, WITH. The former means to be in accord or harmony, as "The part that I have corresponds to the part that you have." The latter means to exchange letters as "I correspond regularly with Mr. Jones."

COULD OF. A vulgar corruption that should never be used for could have. This applies also to had of, may of, might of, should of, etc.

COUNCIL, COUNSEL, CONSUL. The first, a deliberative body, the second, advice, or to give advice, the third, a commercial representative of a foreign government.

COUPLE. Use only to indicate two persons or objects connected or linked in some way.

CREDIBLE, CREDITABLE. The former means believable; the latter, praiseworthy.

CROWD. Sanctioned by colloquial usage in the sense of a social group or clique, but should be avoided in formal writing.

CUNNING. Means crafty, sly, designing. Do not use for attractive, pleasing.

CURRENT, CURRENT. The former, a berry; the latter, that which is passing.

CUSTOM, HABIT. Communities, social groups, and institutions have customs, but individuals have habits. Thus, "It is the custom of this academy to make an annual award for outstanding research in chemistry"; but "I am in the habit of brushing my teeth twice daily."

D

DATA. The plural of datum. Say "data are."

DATE. Colloquially acceptable for an appointment or social engagement, but should not be used to indicate the person dated.

DEAL. A colloquialism for transaction, bargain.

DEFINITELY, DEFINITELY. The former means precisely, with assurance; the latter, finally, conclusively, with exactness.

DELIVER. It is better to say "He gave a lecture," "He made an oration."

DEMISE. Do not use for death. The word means the passing of some authority, distinction, or privilege to another, perhaps by death.

DEPOT. Means warehouse, storage place. May be used to indicate a freight warehouse but not a building for railway passengers. Say station.

DEPRECATORY, DEPRECIATORY. The former means apologetic; the latter, tending to deprecate. Do not confuse.

DETRACT, DISTRACT. The former means to take away from; the latter, to bewilder, harass mentally.

DIALECTAL, DIALECTICAL. The former means characteristic of a dialect; the latter, pertaining to dialectics.

DIE. Say die of not die with.

Wrong: He died with a heart attack.

Right: He died of a heart attack.

DIFFER FROM, WITH. Use the former to express unlikeness, as "These two objects differ from each other only in color." The latter indicates a disagreement of opinion, as "I differ with you on that point."

DISEASED, DECEASED. The former, afflicted with a disease; the latter, dead.

DISINTERESTED. Frequently misused for uninterested. Disinterested means without self-interest; uninterested means lacking interest.

DISTINCTLY, DISTINCTIVELY. The former means plainly; the latter, in a way to distinguish one thing from another.

DOESN'T, DON'T. The former is the contraction of does not; the latter is the contraction of do not. Say "He doesn't" not "He don't"; "They don't," not "They doesn't."

DONE. Never use for did. "He did the work," not "He done the work."

DOUBT. This word is always followed by whether when uncertainty of choice is to be indicated, as "I doubt whether he did that." It is followed by that when a strong negative probability is to be expressed, as "I doubt that he did it."

DOVE. Dived, not dove, should be used as the past tense of dive.

DUAL, DUEL. The former, composed of two; the latter, a combat between two persons.

DUE TO. This is an adjective phrase and should not be used to modify a verb, as in, "I was late due to the heavy snow." Say, "I was late because of the heavy snow."

E

EACH OTHER, ONE ANOTHER. Use the former when referring to two; the latter when referring to more than two.

ECONOMIC, ECONOMICAL. The former refers to the science of economics; the latter to saving, frugality.

EFFICACY, EFFICIENCY. The former means power to produce effects; the latter, dispatch with which such effects are produced. Thus, "Because of their belief in the efficacy of prayer Roman legions always sought the blessings of the gods before entering a battle, but it was upon the superior discipline and general efficiency of their troops that the Romans relied for victory."

EGOISM, EGOTISM. These terms are alike in implying self-interest, but the latter suggests offensive exaltation of self.

EITHER, BOTH, EACH. Either should be used only to indicate one or the other of two; both means the one and the other, two together; each refers to one of a number considered individually.

ELEGANT. Means notable for neatness, propriety, and refinement. It should not be used for good, enjoyable, pleasant.

ELEMENT, FACTOR, PHASE. Frequently used vaguely. Element means a constituent principle, essential part; factor means an agency that contributes to a result; phase means one stage in the development of a thing.

EMIGRATE, IMMIGRATE. The former means to go out of a country or place; the latter, to go into a country or place.

EMINENT, IMMANENT, IMMINENT. The first, distinguished; the second, indwelling; the third, impending.

ENTHUSE. A vulgarism for the phrases, to become enthusiastic, to rouse enthusiasm, etc.

EUPHEMISM, EUPHUISM. The former applies to a delicate word or expression substituted for an indelicate or offensive word or expression; the latter refers to an affected use of words or language.

EXPECT. Incorrectly used for suppose, imagine, suspect. It means to look forward to.

Wrong: I expect so.

Right: I imagine so.

Right: I expect to go to Florida.

EXTANT, EXTENT. The former means not destroyed or lost; the latter, measure.

EXTRA. Incorrectly used for unusually.

Wrong: This flour is ground extra fine.

Right: This flour is ground unusually fine.

F

FAKER, FAKIR. The former means a swindler, one who fakes; the latter, a Mohammedan ascetic or mendicant priest.

FARTHER, FURTHER. Use farther to indicate greater distance or remoteness and further to express moreover, in addition to.

FELLOW. Colloquial for man, person, sweetheart.

FEWER, LESS. In modern usage fewer is used with reference to number; less is used with reference to quantity or degree. Say "fewer people," not "less people."

FIRSTLY. Prefer first with reference to items in a series. Secondly, thirdly, etc. are acceptable but second, third, etc. are rapidly displacing the longer terms.

FIX. This word means to make fast, secure, set or place firmly. Do not use in the sense of repair, mend. The word is also used colloquially in the sense of condition, predicament, situation.

Colloq.: He is in a bad fix.

Better: He is in a serious predicament.

FOREGO, FORGO. The former means to go before, precede; the latter, to abstain from.
FORMER, LATTER. Used with reference to two persons or things previously mentioned.
FORMERLY, FORMALLY. The first means at a former time; the second, in a formal manner.
FUNNY. Means laugh-provoking, droll, comical. Do not use in the sense of queer, odd, remarkable.

G

GENTLEMAN, LADY. Use to describe only persons of good breeding.
GET. Do not use for be, be able to, may, come, become.
GOOD, WELL. Good is an adjective. Do not use as an adverb: "He plays the piano well (not good)."
GOT. Means obtained, secured. Unnecessary in the sense of having: "Have you a bicycle? (not got)."
 In the sense of must it is colloquial.

Colloq.: I have got to go.

Better: I must go.

GOTTEN. An older form of the past participle of get.

GUERRILLA, GORILLA. The former refers to irregular warfare or one who participates in it; the latter, an ape.

GUESSED. Means conjecture, hit upon at random. Do not use in the sense of think, suppose.

H

HAD HAVE. A vulgarism for had: "I wish I had gone (not had have)."

HAD OUGHT. Never use in speech or writing.

Wrong: I had ought to do that.

Right: I ought to have done that.

Or: I ought to do that.

HEALTHY, HEALTHFUL. Frequently confused. Healthy means possessed of health; healthful means health giving. Thus, "He has a healthy appearance," but "This city has a healthful climate."

HEAPS, HEAP. Do not use for much, a great deal, many.

HOME, TO HOME. Say "He was not at home (not home, or to home)."

HOMELY. A provincialism for homelike.

HONORABLE, REVEREND. Both should be written in full, preceded by the and followed by the full name: "The Honorable George Smith"; "The Reverend Thomas Matthews," or "The Reverend Mr. Matthews."

HOW COME? A vulgarism for why.

HUNG. One form of the past tense of hang. When speaking of the death penalty use hanged in preference to hung.

HYPOCRITICAL, HYPERCRITICAL. The former means deceitful; the latter, excessively critical.

I

IF. Whether is preferred after verbs of seeing, learning, doubting, asking, etc.

Right: I doubt if I shall go.

Preferable: I doubt whether I shall go.

ILLEGIBLE, UNREADABLE. The former means difficult to read; the latter, not suitable for reading.

IN, INTO. In means within; into refers to the act of entering or motion toward, as "He was in the room," but "He walked into the room."

IN BACK OF. Do not use for behind, at the back of.

INCREDIBLE, INCREDULOUS. The former has the meaning of unbelievable; the latter, skeptical.

INDICT, INDITE. The first means charge with a crime; the second, to write.

INFER, IMPLY. Frequently confused. Infer means to derive by induction or deduction; imply means to express indirectly, insinuate.

INFERIOR. Say inferior to and not inferior than.

INGENIOUS, INGENUOUS. The former means having skill, intelligent; the latter, frank, candid, or (sometimes) naive.

INSIDE OF. The of is unnecessary.

INTERSTATE, INTRASTATE. The former means between states; the latter, within a state.

INVITE. This is a verb and should never be used as a noun.

IT'S, ITS. The former is the contraction of it is; the latter expresses possession.

K

KIND OF A, SORT OF A. Omit a. Kind of, sort of is also used colloquially in the sense of rather, somewhat, somehow.

Colloq.: His wit is sort of dull.

Preferable: His wit is rather dull.

L

LAST, LATEST. Use last to indicate definite finality and latest to indicate most recent but not necessarily final.

LATER, LATTER. The former means after something else in point of time; the latter means the second of two things previously mentioned.

LAUNDERED. Not laundried.

LAY, LIE. Lie is an intransitive verb and means to recline; lay is a transitive verb and means to put down. The principal parts of these verbs are:

lie	lay	lain
lay	laid	laid

Right: Lie down and rest a bit.

Right: Lay the book on the table.

LEAVE, LET. Do not use leave for let as in the sentence "Let (not leave) them go."

LIKE, AS. Like should not introduce a subject and verb. Say "He acted as if (not like) he had never heard of the subject."

LIKE TO HAVE. Do not use in the sense of almost, come near to.

LOAN. Except when referring to a financial transaction do not use as a verb: "Lend (not loan) me the book."

LOSE, LOOSE. Frequently confused. Lose means cease to have in possession; loose means not tight, to release.

LOSE OUT, WIN OUT. Used in sports columns of newspapers, but should be avoided in all other writing.

LOT, LOTS OF. Do not use for many or much.

LOVELY. Has the meaning of inspiring with love, lovable, and should not be used loosely in the sense of pleasant, delightful, interesting, etc.

Representation of Numbers

1. Spell out every number of less than three digits when used in ordinary text matter.

The price was two dollars.

There were eighty-two boys and eighteen girls.

2. Where similar numbers occur in groups, do not use figures for some and spell out others. If the largest contains three or more digits, use figures for all.

The number of bushels produced during June, July, and August was 42, 89, and 127 respectively.

3. Use figures to express dimensions, degrees, distances, weights, measures, sums of money, etc., in mathematical or statistical text.

92 pounds	22 miles
45 caliber	16 feet
$1,000	32° F

4. Compound numerals of less than one hundred should be hyphenated.

eighty-four but fifteen hundred

5. Spell out round numbers of even units (100, 1,000, 10,000, etc.).

There were about five hundred present.
There were 550 present.

6. Do not begin a sentence with figures, even if similar figures are used elsewhere.

Two hundred and eighteen ships, 417 flags, and 86 uniforms.

7. Spell out numbers representing the time of day except when used with A.M., or P.M.

He left at eight.

The race starts at half-past two.

At 4:00 P.M. (omit o'clock).

8. Spell out the age of persons, places, or things.

She was twenty-six years old.

This vase is one hundred and fifty-six years old.

Chicago is more than one hundred years old.

9. Do not use st, nd, rd, th with the day of the month.

January 15, 1935, not January 15th, 1935.

Diction

Diction is the choice of words for the accurate, effective, and varied expression of thought and feeling in speech and writing.

While accepted usage varies from occasion to occasion, from one class of people to another, and according to differences in locality, yet logic and good taste demand the observance and practice of certain standards of good usage in formal writing and speech.

The following suggestions were formulated in accordance with these standards:

1. Do not use archaic or obsolete words.

Archaic words are those peculiar to remote periods of time, such as thou for you, forsooth for indeed, etc.

Obsolete words are those which have completely gone out of use. Most authorities do not condemn as obsolete any word used in a major literary work written since the Restoration (1660).

2. Do not use provincialisms in formal speech or writing. Such expressions, however, are permissible in conversation or informal writing.

Provincialisms are words or expressions current in one section of a country but unknown or not used in the same sense elsewhere.

Examples: Varmint for vermin, cayuse for horse, calculate for think, plumb for completely.

3. Never use vulgarisms.

Vulgarisms are words or expressions characteristic of illiteracy.

Examples: Them flowers, where does he live at, to enthuse.

4. Avoid improprieties.

Improprieties are words or expressions correct in themselves but used either in an incorrect sense or in an incorrect function.

5. Do not use colloquialisms in formal speech or writing.

Colloquialisms are words or expressions permissible in ordinary conversation or writing but not used in formal speech or writing.

Examples: Taxi, isn't, pal, backbone for taxicab, is not, friend, courage.

6. Guard against affected or flowery language, too rigid adherence to bookish correctness, and a straining for accuracy which sometimes causes awkwardness.

7. Guard against redundancy and tautology.

Redundancy is the use of grammatically superfluous words or phrases.

Example: Come down off of the fence.

Tautology is the repetition of synonymous words or expressions in close succession.

Example: The day dawned clear and bright, without a cloud in the sky.

8. Idiomatic words and expressions are accepted as good form.

An idiomatic word or expression is one which is peculiar to a language and sanctioned by long usage, although sometimes in violation of the rules of grammar.

Examples: Plan to go, at home, different from, as regards.

9. Use words that express the exact thought or feeling you wish to convey.

In addition to their literal meaning (denotation) many words are possessed of color, atmosphere, and tone, all of which give to them fine shades of meaning and powers of suggestion (connotation) beyond those of other words having the same literal definition.

Consult your dictionary for the literal meaning of the word you wish to use. If the meaning of that particular word does not completely express your thought, or if it is weak, trite, or overworked, look it up in your thesaurus and choose from its synonyms the one most suitable to your subject, the occasion, reader, or auditor.

10. Choose words having easy and pleasant combinations of sounds.

The following suggestions will be found helpful: (a) avoid placing in close succession words that rhyme; (b) avoid the use of a too regular meter (singsong effect); (c) avoid like sounds in close succession, especially sibilants.

Remember, finally, that the monotonous repetition of certain words and phrases, the habitual use of slang, and deliberate smartness in writing or speaking are usually indicative of a lazy mind!

Every effort made toward better diction will aid mental alertness, outline ideas more sharply, and freshen and strengthen the powers of expression—all of which makes utilization of one's intelligence a keen delight.

Spelling

Misspelling is often due to mispronunciation. Learn carefully how to pronounce words and, generally speaking, the correct spelling of them will be easy.

Never write a word of which you are not certain of the spelling. Use your dictionary constantly.

GENERAL SPELLING RULES.—The following rules are intended to provide a general guide to correct spelling and, though there are exceptions to them, they will be found adequate in most cases.

SUFFIXES.—A suffix is a letter or a syllable added at the end of a word to serve a derivative, formative, or inflectional function.

1. Words of one syllable and those accented on the last syllable if ending in one consonant preceded by one vowel, generally double the consonant when a suffix beginning with a vowel is added.

mad	madder
prefer	preferred

When the accent is given to a syllable other than the last, the doubling does not occur.

visit	visited
-------	---------

When the addition of a suffix causes a shifting of the accent to a syllable other than the last, the consonant is not doubled.

prefer	preference
--------	------------

2. In words ending with silent e, drop the e when adding a suffix beginning with a vowel.

glide	gliding
-------	---------

When adding a suffix beginning with a or o to words ending in ce or ge retain the e to preserve the soft sound of the c or g.

service	serviceable
courage	courageous

3. In spelling words containing ei or ie remember the jingle:

Write i before e

Except after c

Or when sounded as a

As in neighbor and weigh.

relieve	freight	receive
---------	---------	---------

4. When adding a suffix to a word ending in y preceded by a consonant, change the y to i.

lazy	laziness
------	----------

Verbs ending in y retain it when ing is added.

play	playing
------	---------

The rule for changing y to i also applies to the forming of plurals except when the y is preceded by a vowel.

fly	flies
play	plays

PREFIXES.—A prefix is a letter or syllable placed at the beginning of a word to modify its significance.

1. Words beginning with a consonant do not double that consonant when a prefix ending in a vowel is attached.

proficient	not	profficient
------------	-----	-------------

2. When a prefix ending with a consonant is added to a word beginning with a vowel, the consonant is not doubled.

disappoint	not	dissappoint
------------	-----	-------------

3. Prefixes ending with a consonant retain it when followed by a word beginning with a consonant.

addition	not	adition
----------	-----	---------

PLURALS

1. Nouns which do not end in s or es form their plurals by adding s.

bees	cows
trains	bricks
horses	girls

2. Nouns ending with a sibilant (s, sh, x, z) form their plurals by adding es.

dresses	taxes
fishes	blazes

3. Nouns ending with y preceded by a consonant form their plurals by changing the y to i and adding es.

armies	studies
factories	follies

4. Nouns ending with y preceded by a vowel form their plurals by retaining the y and adding s.

plays	jays
donkeys	keys

5. Nouns ending in o preceded by a vowel form their plurals by adding s.

portfolios	cameos
radios	folios

6. Nouns ending with o preceded by a consonant add s or es to form the plural.

potatoes	dynamos
Negroes	solos
tomatoes	pianos

7. The following are examples of surviving Old English irregular plurals:

geese	swine
oxen	sheep

8. Foreign words commonly used in the English language usually form their plurals in accordance with the language from which they were borrowed. The present tendency, however, is to anglicize the pronunciation of the plural of such words.

alumna (feminine) alumnae (pronounced a-lum'ne) alumnus (masculine) alumni (pronounced a-lum'ni) basis
 bases (pronounced ba'ses) focus foci (pronounced fo'si)

9. Compound nouns usually form their plurals by adding s or es to the governing word in the compound.

runners-up daughters-in-law courts-martial

If the compounded words are so closely associated as to form one word, the s or es is added to the end of the word.

bucketfuls spoonfuls basketfuls

COMPOUND WORDS

1. Adjectives formed of two or more words and preceding the noun which they modify should be hyphenated.

well-known author half-dead victim

Adjectives or adverbs in combined form should not be hyphenated when used after the word modified.

The new encyclopedia is strictly up to date.

2. When such words as book, house, mill, etc., are prefixed by a noun of one syllable, they form one word.

textbook sawmill
 smokehouse cookbook

When the prefixed noun contains two syllables, use the hyphen.

sample-book lumber-mill power-house powder-room

When the prefixed noun contains three or more syllables the two words are written separately.

policy book chocolate mill business house etiquette book

3. Compound numerals of less than a hundred and more than twenty, when used as adjectives, should be hyphenated.

forty-seven twenty-five thirty-nine fifty-six

When fractions are used as nouns, however, the hyphen is not used.

One sixth of the cotton was burned.

4. Words to which prefixes are attached are hyphenated only when such words begin with w, y, or the same vowel in which the prefix ends.

coeducation intra-yearly co-operation tri-weekly anti-idealist pro-oceanic

5. Compound words retain the hyphen when absence of it might cause difficulty in reading or interpretation.

re-creation recreation twenty five- twenty-five dollar dollar bills bills

6. The following words and phrases are written separately:

all right good night any one some one any time some day
 by and by some way
 every one per cent

ABBREVIATIONS

Discrimination must be exercised in the use of abbreviations. Under normal circumstances do not abbreviate a word if the abbreviated form is difficult or puzzling to read.

1. Capitalize an abbreviation only if the unabbreviated word would be capitalized.

2. Titles preceding personal names should be spelled out except the following:

- (a) Mr., Messrs., Mrs. before a name
- (b) Esq., Sr., Jr., after a name
- (c) Rev. and Hon., except in formal invitations and announcements when they are spelled out and preceded by The.

The Reverend Elwood Harbridge
 The Honorable Harry S. Truman

3. Christian names should be spelled out except where they are abbreviated in a signature or from the author's choice.

George C. Armstrong
 Geo. C. Armstrong

4. Do not abbreviate parts of geographic names except in tabular matter where space will not permit full spelling.

Port Arthur Pt. Arthur

Note: Saint or Saints are always abbreviated when used before a name:

St. Mary's Church
 SS. Peter and Paul

5. Abbreviate designations of weights and measures and symbols of measurements when these are preceded by a number.

3 yds. 6 gals.
 4 hrs. 10 min.

BASIC REFERENCE WORKS

Samuel Johnson, famous English lexicographer, once said, "Knowledge is of two kinds. We know a subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it." This distinction is especially pertinent today, when the world's store of knowledge is so vast that no individual can hope to possess it. Our best guides to the fields of knowledge unfamiliar to us are reference works; with them we should be as familiar as a mariner is with compass and sextant.

Almost all libraries have the more important reference works, which are usually kept separate from other books. Probably the best way to learn about a subject is to consult several general encyclopedias. The encyclopedia article gives a valuable, general, comprehensive outline of the subject, and usually provides a preliminary bibliography. More specialized reference works may then be consulted; these in turn will list books and articles in the special field being investigated. It should be remembered that reference works, although valuable guides, usually deal only in a general way with a subject, and should not be regarded as final authorities. For more detailed, and probably more authoritative information, students should consult works which deal with the specific questions they are investigating.

The student should also become acquainted with the reference works which treat of language and its use. A familiarity with these books enriches one's knowledge.

In various specialized fields there are also valuable reference works which the students should consult. Some of the most important of these have been selected.

WRITING TO SELL

MARKETS

Writing is a business like any other. Unless employed as a staff writer, the professional writer is his own employer, office force, and efficiency expert. He is familiar with the various markets for written material, since in order to achieve success he must sell to those markets. Roughly, they may be divided into the book publishers, the smooth-paper magazines, the pulp-paper magazines, the newspapers and syndicates, the trade journals and house organs.

Book publishers form a very distinct class. They are looking for material of suitable length for publication in book form. They seldom constitute a profitable market for the beginner, who usually finds it wiser in the long run to concentrate on shorter pieces of writing, any one of which does not represent a great investment of time. Later he may work up to the novel and the long nonfiction work.

The magazines published on smooth paper are termed "slicks" by the writers. They include The Saturday Evening Post, McCalls, Cosmopolitan, etc. They print chiefly the work of established fiction authors and prominent writers of nonfiction. The pay is very good, but the volume and quality of competition leave little opportunity for the beginner. Nevertheless, since some of these magazines are found on every newsstand and in many homes, they receive a very large number of manuscripts from unknowns—manuscripts which would have a much better chance in less prominent markets.

The magazines printed on pulp paper—"pulp" in writers' parlance—publish fiction almost exclusively. They buy love stories and detective stories, tales of mystery and adventure, particularly in its "western" variety. But each "pulp" publishes only one kind of story. A magazine may be wholly devoted to adventure stories about aviators, or tales based on future scientific developments—"science fiction." A rapid-fire style, easy to read, with shrewd, terse characterizations is desired.

The newspapers pay relatively low rates to unknown outsiders. Most of their material is gathered and written by paid employees. Nevertheless they will sometimes accept interesting items from outsiders. Small newspapers particularly may be developed into a valuable market by the enterprising writer. The syndicates furnish material for newspapers and magazines. Some of them use only established authors. But others, which supply stories and articles to rural newspapers and small periodicals, are willing to accept material from unknowns. True, the pay is small, but the competition is not so keen and a matured style is not essential.

Trade journals are periodicals devoted to a single business or profession. Much of their material is written on contract. Still they should not be neglected by the author who has or is willing to gain the necessary specialized knowledge. House organs are the publications of single business firms, intended for circulation among employees, customers, or agents. Because they are little known, they sometimes offer interesting opportunities. It must be remembered that even the large newsstand does not give a true picture of writers' markets. Tiny periodicals and amateur magazines never appear on the newsstand. Many of these latter do not pay for the material they publish, but they should not therefore be invariably shunned by the writer. Merely to have a story or article published is a heartening achievement, psychologically valuable to the beginner.

REACHING THE MARKET.—In view of the confusing multiplicity of markets and the burdensome amount of work involved in selling, the writer can sometimes profitably avail himself of the services of an agent. An agent is a professional salesman of written material. He accepts stories and articles from a writer and receives from the writer a commission (almost invariably ten per cent) on anything he sells. A good agent has a wide knowledge of markets and, more important, he knows the condition of markets from month to month—which ones are actively buying, the sort of material for which there is a special call, the top price that can be asked and obtained for a certain manuscript in a certain market, etc. He is also personally acquainted with a number of editors, though this does not mean that an editor will buy everything an agent recommends. He understands publishers' contracts and is able to protect an author's rights effectively. Since his business office is usually located in New York, the chief publishing center, he can rapidly submit manuscripts to a large number of buyers. Unquestionably there are certain classes of writers for whom an agent's services are very valuable; among them may be mentioned the established author who wishes to be relieved of business responsibilities, the writer who dislikes and shirks the task of selling, and the beginner who is personally acquainted with an energetic agent. But certain possible disadvantages must be noted. An agent may not push the work of a beginner as energetically as might the writer himself. An agent may not be interested in sending material to the cheapest markets, since his commission would be trifling. Finally, an agent may be a considerable expense. In this connection it should be remembered that a good agent seldom charges a fee for reading a manuscript; he tries to make money with rather than out of a writer; he does not engage in the conduct of correspondence courses in writing; he is a salesman, not a teacher—although he is often able to give valuable advice to the authors whom he sponsors. Beyond this, the question of whether or not to employ an agent is one which each individual author must decide for himself.

Specific information about markets, the names and addresses of periodicals, type of material used, and rates paid, can be obtained in publishers' directories and in the magazines published especially for writers, such as The Writer and Writer's Market.

Study markets carefully and shrewdly. Write to fit the needs of markets, or at least try to find the markets in which your style of product has the best chance. A thorough search frequently will reveal a possible market for material that seems at first glance impossible to sell.

FICTION

The story that will sell is a story people like to read. Most people do not like to read about unpleasant subjects. Since they identify themselves with the hero or heroine, they do not like to read stories in which those characters come to grief or end up in a state of bafflement or bewilderment. This is not to say that the reader dislikes reading about struggles, difficulties, clashes of will and character. On the contrary, those are the very things he delights to read about. But he also wants things to come out well—or at least definitely—in the end. He demands a clean-cut finish. The story of failure and disillusionment has its place in literature, but the success story is easier to sell. Like it or not, the writer usually must cater to the daydreams and hidden ambitions of his readers.

The story that will sell is a story people can believe—at least while they are reading it. It need not be consistently realistic, but no single event in the story should strain the reader's credulity. Fantastic and improbable things may happen, but the reader's credulity must first be aroused by the proper suggestions and atmospheric touches. The motivation of the characters is especially important. Their problems must be easy to grasp, their reactions natural. The reader must be able to put himself in their place and feel that their emotions are genuine, their actions necessary.

Most stories can be reduced to a very simple formula: A. one or more characters want to attain a certain goal; B. obstacles arise which seem to make the attainment of the goal impossible; C. the obstacles are overcome (usually by the direct efforts of the characters involved) and the goal reached. For example, a young man falls in love with his employer's daughter; the employer makes their marriage contingent on the young man's selling a large insurance policy to a miserly millionaire; the young man manages to sell the policy and he and the girl are united. This particular plot is trite and outworn. Nevertheless it illustrates the essential elements. Obviously its story-interest would depend largely on the cleverness of the device by which the young man sold the policy. He might rescue the millionaire's grandchild from drowning. He might learn that the millionaire was a stamp-collector and find a rare stamp for him. He might make a bet with the millionaire. Or the girl might solve the problem instead of the young man. There is no end to the possible variations.

This basic plot-structure (goal-obstacle-success) can be applied to stories of all types. In the detective story it takes the form of: A. problem as to who committed a murder; B. false clues and misleading evidence; C. discovery of who committed the murder. In the outdoor story it is a man's struggle with and overcoming of the forces of nature. The formula fits the tale of two thwarted lovers and the story of a man's struggle to become reconciled with his God.

It must be remembered, however, that most successful stories do not use the simplest form of the A.B.C. formula. There are usually several obstacles, one giving rise to another. The obstacle may often take the form of an individual—the villain. One of the obstacles may come as a sudden surprise when the goal is almost in sight; a new character may enter the story, giving the plot a radical turn. This surprise element is especially useful and almost essential in lifting the reader's interest midway in the narrative. Or one of the characters may be a doubtful quantity, so that the reader does not know until the end whether he is an ally of the hero or an obstacle. In general, the most interesting struggles are those which depend on the clash of personalities. Readers like interesting, human characters with failings as well as good points.

All of which boils down to one essential consideration: the writer must keep the reader constantly in mind when he creates his story. He must keep the reader interested all the way.

NONFICTION

The writer of nonfiction has certain definite advantages over the fictionist. His market is, if anything, larger, and interesting subject matter can compensate to a considerable degree for defects in style. His work is based solidly on fact. If he comes across certain facts which he thinks make a story worth telling, there is a good chance that editors and readers will be of the same opinion. Human interest is his keynote. True-life happenings, the experiences of people who pursue unusual occupations or have been in out-of-the-way places—these are his stock in trade. Unless he has special aptitudes or advantages, he should avoid the more abstract and controversial subjects, such as politics, economics, and the like. He can find his subject matter within the range of his own experience. And he can readily expand the scope of his experience by making more acquaintances, seeing more of the city or district in which he lives, following up unusual stories which he hears at second hand—in short, imitating the practices of the competent free-lance reporter.

This does not mean that the nonfiction writer should neglect to read periodicals and books. On the contrary, he should make every effort to gauge the needs of the publications to which he is attempting to sell, and to keep up with and ahead of public taste. Moreover, reading may provide him with valuable clues and hints. Material supplied by newspapers and national publications may be reslanted to fit the needs of a lesser market. Dry scientific and scholarly articles may hide a good story. The writer should attempt to capitalize on his own interests and hobbies, develop them into specialties.

Although subject matter is the chief concern of the nonfiction writer, an interesting narrative style will add greatly to the marketability of his articles. Clarity is paramount. Obscure statements and hazy explanations should be avoided. The reader should be led along by easy stages. Each paragraph should satisfy a part of his curiosity and at the same time arouse his interest further. The first sentence should not tell the whole story. The writer should canvass the main points of interest in his subject and then space them out evenly through his article, neither packed at the beginning nor delayed until the end. If this practice is followed, the whole article gains in effectiveness.

Many poorly-written articles are published merely because the subject matter is interesting. If the writer combines interesting subject matter with an effective terse style of narration, he will find a market.

IMPORTANT POINTS

Adapt your style and material to the market to which you are attempting to sell. Read the various publications of that market; they are your blueprints. Study the information given in the writers' magazines. Become familiar with editors' likes and dislikes. Learn which subjects are favored and which tabooed. The magazine market is roughly divided into groups of magazines of similar policy. A story rejected by one magazine can usually be offered for sale to half a dozen others with some hope of acceptance. Watch for new markets opening up. They will need more material and will be more likely to take the work of unknown authors.

Keep ahead of public taste. Don't just rewrite the stories which appeared in last month's magazines. They are dead wood. Strive for novelty. This does not mean that an editor will accept material violating the policy and special taboos of his publication. It does mean that editors are looking for new angles and new variants on old themes.

Take particular pains to make the beginnings of your stories or articles interesting. If the first paragraph sets a problem and suggests fascinating possibilities, the reader will be eager to go on. If the first paragraph is dull, even though later material is very exciting, the reader may go no further. A good story or article may fail because the writer did not give sufficient thought to catching the reader's interest. A story in the modern style begins with action, not with a long description of the characters and background.

If possible, type your manuscripts on regular typing paper (8½ by 11 inches). Double space the lines. Type only on one side of the paper. Leave wide margins. Do not crowd the pages. Most magazines will not return unwanted manuscripts unless they are accompanied by a self-addressed envelope with the required amount of postage already affixed. Manuscripts of any size are best sent flat in a large envelope. Small manuscripts may be folded and sent in a business-size envelope. They should not be rolled. Bulky manuscripts may be sent more economically by express, with enclosed directions that they be returned to you by express, collect. Do not address manuscripts to "The Editor"; it will not procure them additional attention. It is usually unnecessary to write an explanatory letter. Manuscripts whose form violates these rules are at a disadvantage.

Above all, keep on writing! Don't be worried by rejection slips. Most successful authors spend five to ten years receiving nothing much else. There are a hundred reasons because of which a good story or article may be rejected. It may accidentally duplicate material already purchased. It may be submitted at a time when the market is slack, the editor buying little or nothing. Most magazines can buy only six or eight stories a month—a tiny fraction of the total material submitted. So don't let feelings of despondency interfere with your writing. An author is a poor judge of the quality of his own product. He may do some of his best work when he feels he is doing his worst. Inspiration is a rather rare commodity. You cannot depend on it. Set yourself definite working hours and keep them, whether or not inspiration comes. If you really want to write for a living, the effort will be worth while.

PROOFREADING AND PROOFREADER'S MARKS

The common marks used by proofreaders and typesetters are listed and illustrated here. These marks, used universally, provide the best means of indicating corrections and changes clearly and quickly. However, if the writer feels the slightest doubt of his ability to make clear his intentions, he can write on the margin a brief note to the typesetter, explaining precisely what he wants done.

After a piece of writing is set in type, proofs are pulled and sent to the author for correction or approval. Usually the proofs are galleys, long sheets equal to a little more than three pages of an ordinary book. Each galley represents a heavy tray of metal at the typesetter's, and any change in the proof must be duplicated in the type itself.

When the original manuscript was set in type, the typesetter read each line of the manuscript, word for word, and transcribed it. When the corrected galleys go back to the typesetter so that the type can be made to correspond with the amended galleys, the typesetter does not read them. He looks only at the margins. Any correction not clearly marked outside the type area will be ignored.

marc. Marcato. With emphasis.

mf. Mezzo-forte. Moderately loud.

M.M. Maelzel's metronome. Found at the beginning of a composition, together with the number of metronome beats per minute at which the piece is to be played, e.g., M.M. 80, or 80 quarter notes per minute.

mp. Mezzo-piano. Moderately soft.

Ott. Ottava. An octave. Ottava alta: to be played an octave higher than written. Ottava bassa, to be played an octave lower.

p. Piano. Softly.

pf. Piano-forte. Soft, then loud.

pp. Pianissimo. Very soft.

ppp. Pianissimo. As softly as possible.

pizz. Pizzicato. Direction to violinists to pluck the string with the fingers.

Rall. Rallentando. Becoming gradually slower.

Sost. Sostenuto. Sustained: prolonging the tone for the full duration indicated.

Trem. Tremolando. Tremblingly; a note or chord played with great rapidity, so as to produce such an effect.

EFFECTIVE PUBLIC SPEAKING

The most pleasing style of public speaking and the one most characteristic of the twentieth century, is the conversational. Amplification systems have made it unnecessary for the speaker on the rostrum to develop a voice sufficiently loud and carrying to "reach the last row." The radio has made the quiet easy way of talking seem the natural thing, and has in addition brought into existence a class of radio speakers who deliberately cultivate a low, rapid, well-modulated voice and avoid all sounds involving explosive or windy expulsions of breath. The resonant, full-throated utterances of the old-school actor and the fervent political orator have by gradual stages come to have an artificial and almost insincere sound. Their style was well suited to the needs of pre-radio civilization. It had several points in its favor and was decidedly more difficult to master, requiring as it did the vocal equipment of an opera singer. But there is no question that it is being replaced by the conversational style, which achieves effectiveness in a simpler and easier way.

The basis of an effective modern manner of speaking is good conversational ability. The latter is not, however, a very common attribute. Many socially successful people are not in the strictest sense of the word good conversationalists. They talk in half-sentences and phrases, seldom say more than a few words at one time. They use a surprisingly small vocabulary. They are jocular, witty, proficient at repartee—in short, good mixers. But they find themselves in difficulties as soon as they have to talk connectedly for two consecutive minutes. Without the stimulus of replies, questions, and comments, their source of inspiration dries up.

The person who wants to become an effective public speaker will find it helpful to cultivate a more extended conversational style. He should try to express his thoughts fully, rather than hint at them with brief phrases. He should acquire the not-so-common habit of talking in sentences. This is good mental discipline as well. Most people talk vaguely because their thoughts are vague, their opinions uncertain and ill-defined. An abbreviated, cryptic style of speech helps cover up this condition. Fuller expression brings it into the open and forces the individual to think and to think clearly. Some sort of logical structure becomes necessary. Certain ideas and phrases must be subordinated. Others must be emphasized. In short, the individual finds himself acquiring the ability to talk in the connected, smooth-flowing way that characterizes the successful public speaker. Arguments are particularly helpful, since they encourage the marshaling of ideas in a persuasive order, building up to the final capstone. The telling of anecdotes, jokes, and stories is also useful, requiring a dramatic, well-timed style of delivery. In short, conversation provides a valuable field of practice.

The individual who has developed conversational ability has no reason to feel frightened when he rises to address a group. All that is expected of him is a somewhat more extended effort. For this he may find notes helpful, usually just a few indications of main points, so that he will not wander too far from his subject; or the notes may be greater in number, and he may refer to them more often. One particular value in notes is that they provide a new starting-point if the speaker happens to lose the thread of his discourse or find himself at a momentary loss for words. Some speakers go even farther and write their speeches out beforehand. This involves a great deal of extra work and is apt to create a somewhat labored, though possibly more coherent, effect; it is nevertheless frequently advisable for persons who are called upon to speak but rarely, or who have to expound very complex subjects. Certainly all speakers, whether or not they use notes or speak from a written manuscript, should rehearse their talks beforehand. Friends or family sometimes provide a good audience for such a rehearsal, their presence encouraging a conversational delivery. Practice is just as essential for the speaker as for the singer or pianist. If he goes for a few days without sessions of extended talking, he will find himself becoming less glib. Sentences will not flow smoothly and effortlessly. He will begin to hesitate and make false starts. The only remedy for such faults is continual practice of one sort or another.

Little advice of real value can be given the speaker as to his physical behavior on the platform or its equivalent. Old schools of oratory placed great emphasis on gestures, and developed complicated systems of movement to emphasize various attitudes and emotions—the clenched fist to indicate defiance, the palm pushed out to symbolize rejection, the finger pointed at an imaginary adversary, etc. These are practically useless for the modern speaker, who should carry his body easily and employ only such gestures as occur naturally in the course of any conversation. If he speaks naturally and devotes real thought to what he is saying, his body will take care of itself. Audiences never resent nervous mannerisms on the part of the speaker, if what he says is interesting. Anything that is natural is not offensive. The speaker should not be afraid of pausing in order to think out a point before making his next statement. There is no need for him to pour out words in a steady flow, like some sort of machine. Many beginners, in fact, talk too fast. The experienced speaker pauses after key statements, in order that they will sink into the consciousness of his listeners. He gives his audience ample time to appreciate his arguments. If they laugh at his jokes, he does not cut in on their laughter. He is a past master in the art of timing.

Despite the thoroughness of a speaker's preparations, it is not always easy for him to maintain a natural, straightforward attitude toward his listeners. They tend to dissolve into a sea of impersonal faces and he senses only an excruciating social pressure. He becomes embarrassed and finds the utterance of each word painful. There is an easy and almost infallible remedy for this difficulty. It consists of looking at the audience as individuals. Instead of talking to the whole audience at once, the speaker concentrates on single persons, notes their expressions, looks them in the eye, tries to make them nod or smile. He establishes a personal contact. His listeners are gratified by this device and the speaker gains a great advantage. He has transformed the difficult problem of persuading or amusing an impersonal group into the easy problem of persuading or amusing single individuals. Without conscious effort, his manner of talking becomes conversational, intimate, and convincing.

SHORTHAND

The modern business concern desires its office workers to be versatile, and frequently encourages versatility by shifting individuals from one kind of work to another, thus making it easier to handle emergency situations and also preparing the individual worker for promotion. A good working knowledge of shorthand and typing is always a valuable asset, even in a position which does not directly involve secretarial or stenographic duties. It cannot be too strongly emphasized, therefore, that the time taken in learning shorthand and typing is well spent and will repay the student many times over. Even a little knowledge of the fundamentals is better than none at all.

Without knowing it, most office workers make use of a kind of simplified shorthand. That is, they learn to use abbreviations in noting down memorandums and making outlines for their own personal use. A few letters are made to stand for a word, and unessential words are eliminated. Shorthand carries this process a great deal further, by using an alphabet of marks, in which curving lines stand for syllables and words, and in which the particular curve and slant of each line and the position of each dot has a meaning. The accompanying illustration shows the characteristic shorthand alphabet. It is included through the courtesy of the Gregg Publishing Company. It is beyond the scope of this section to attempt a course of instruction on the subject of shorthand; that belongs to the schools and colleges of business.

TYPING

With typing the situation is somewhat different. Today the typewriter has become an instrument of general use, neither confined to the office, nor requiring a highly skilled operator. This is because it is fairly easy for anyone to attain moderate proficiency in handling the machine. Of course, very speedy, accurate typing can only be accomplished by use of the "touch" system, which requires a rather long period of instruction. But very speedy typing is usually needed only for copy work. The demands of the average person are satisfied if he learns to type with sufficient speed to keep up with the words and sentences formulated in his mind. This is generally not difficult.

It is possible to attain a satisfactory degree of efficiency on the typewriter by the "sight" system without losing the time or going to the expense of mastering the elaborate touch system. In fact, any intelligent person in a few weeks can acquire such skill as would require many months by the touch system. With a typewriter in every office and in many homes, there is a real need for the simple exercises included in the following paragraphs. Sight typewriting is the system universally used by so-called one-finger artists. In our system, however, we recommend right from the beginning the use of two fingers, the first and second on each hand. Later on as your skill increases you may bring into use the third and fourth digits.

The keyboards of all standard typewriters are identical and when you have mastered one you have mastered all. All keys to the right-hand side of the keyboard are struck with either the first or second finger of the right hand; all the keys to the left-hand side of the keyboard with the first and second fingers of the left hand. The space bar should always be operated with the thumb, and the shift keys, back spacer or tabulating keys with the little fingers, thus leaving the first two fingers free for the actual typing.

Exercise 1.—Fill one whole page with the word "them."

"t" is struck with the first finger of the left hand.

"h" is struck with the first finger of the right hand.

"e" is struck with the second finger of the left hand.

"m" is struck with the first finger of the right hand.

This exercise is put here for two reasons. In the first place the first three letters, "the" are used more than any other word in the English language. Secondly, it will introduce that important principle of typewriting, the alternate hand movement.

Exercise 2.—Copy each of the following words three hundred times: then, these, theme, there, those, think.

This exercise introduces the principle of using one finger to strike two or three times in succession (se and ese).

Exercise 3.—Copy "they" three hundred times, and "that" three hundred times. Then fill up an entire page with the words, "they think that," and another whole page with the words "they think that those think." Be sure to strike the space bar after each word.

Exercise 4.—Write the first three letters of the alphabet "abc" one hundred times. Then add the next letter "a b c d" and write the combination one hundred times. Keep adding one letter in this manner until you have written the entire alphabet one hundred times.

Exercise 5.—The following sentence contains all the letters of the alphabet:

"The big brown fox jumped quickly over the lazy dog's back."

Write the first word 100 times, the first two words 100 times, the first three words 100 times and so on until you have written the whole sentence 100 times.

Exercise 6.—Here is another sentence that contains every letter of the alphabet:

"Wafting zephyrs quickly vexed Jumbo."

Copy this sentence the same as in exercise 5.

Capitals, Figures, Punctuation Marks, and Symbols.—Capital letters are made by pushing down the shift key with the little finger and then striking the letter required with one

Standard typewriter keyboard of the other fingers. The standard keyboard provides a special row of keys for all the figures except 1, which is formed by the small "l" or by the capital "I." Punctuation marks and symbols, with the exception of commas and periods, are also made on most machines by depressing the shift key.

Exercise 7.—Copy each of the following exercises two hundred times:

Harold James Theodore Walter

FILING BY ALPHABET

Alphabetizing is the basis of the filing systems used in all business offices. Although the systems in ordinary use differ in details, all are based upon the same general rules. These rules are given below. It is important to remember that occasionally offices have developed systems which depart from standard practice in some respects.

Alphabetical Arrangement

Arrange words, or proper names, according to the order of their first, second, third letters, etc., carrying the process far enough to place the words in correct alphabetical order. For example:

Stone
Wallace
Winters
Witherspoon

File the names of persons according to (1) surname, (2) given name, (3) middle names or middle initials. For example:

Edward H. Bangs should be filed as Bangs, Edward H.

SPEED.—Now that you have mastered the keyboard it is time to try for speed. Although almost any will serve the purpose, the following practice sentence is suggested: "Now is the time for all men to come to the aid of the party." Copy this sentence at least 100 times every day until you are able to run off sixty words a minute with ease and accuracy. It is also good practice to write your personal letters on the typewriter, to copy interesting items from newspapers and magazines, always holding in your memory as many words as possible while copying. You will be astonished to learn what rapid progress you can make in this way.

Alternative Spellings

When the same name is spelled in more than one way, enter each spelling in the file and cross-refer each spelling to its alternatives.

Titles and Degrees

Amperands (that is, the figure "&"), when correctly a part of the name, should not be written out.

Brown & Jones should not be written as Brown and Jones.

When and is spelled out in the name, the ampersand should not be used.

Jones and Brown should not be written as Jones & Brown.

Note that when such words as American, Northwestern, Lake, and West occur in corporate or institutional names, they are considered in alphabetizing. Compound words which are sometimes written as two words (northwestern—north western), are always arranged as though written in the compounded form.

When the name of an institution contains the name of an individual, the individual's name determines the alphabetical classification for filing purposes.

Names of Government Agencies

The names of government subdivisions and officials are alphabetized under the customary English name of the government.

"Sverige," the official name in Swedish for Sweden, would be "Sweden" in an American file or index.

Where it is necessary to refer to a subdivision within the government or to an individual officer, the subdivisions are detailed in descending order, beginning with the most important.

LETTER WRITING

The Importance of Good Business Letters

Few secretarial tasks are so important or consume so much time as the writing of business letters. Some secretaries are expected merely to transcribe the letters dictated to them, with due attention to correctness and appearance; others have the additional responsibility of determining the wording of letters. Since secretaries are judged largely by the quality of their letters, they should become thoroughly familiar both with the effective use of English, and with correct business-letter usage in the arrangement of parts, spelling, punctuation, and related subjects treated in this office manual.

Secretaries will sense the importance of this phase of their work when they realize that every letter reveals the character and personality of the organization which sends it. If the letter is intelligently composed and carefully typewritten, it adds to the recipient's respect for the organization, and in the long run to the esteem upon which a company's reputation and good will are based. The business letter thus has a role much like that of a firm's personal representative, who may impart either very favorable or extremely unfavorable impressions of his organization. The successful representative takes pains both to dress well and to approach his clients in a correctly trained manner. It rests with the secretary to see that the letter produces the proper effect by being suitably worded and neatly written.

The importance of excellent business letters is increased by the permanence of the impression they produce. In modern business establishments all correspondence is kept on file, at least until it becomes certain that it will no longer be needed. In this way a letter may serve for a long time as a point of contact between organizations and individuals. Every time the executive reviews a file of correspondence, he experiences again the pleasant or unpleasant impressions which the letters produced when first received. Time expended in the careful preparation of letters is therefore time well invested.

As suggested, the duties of the secretary in the writing of letters vary widely according to the individual situation. Some executives make a practice of indicating the gist of the letter in a few general sentences, and require the secretary to clothe their ideas in appropriate words. The secretary should have a practical knowledge of writing methods to perform such a task successfully; and the person who has this ability is an indispensable and highly valued assistant. Other executives dictate the letter in full. Some resent the change of a word or a punctuation mark as unwarranted presumption, and expect the secretary only to typewrite the letter exactly as dictated, putting the parts in proper order and spacing the materials correctly on the page. But with either method of work the secretary who is perfectly informed in letter-writing usages will achieve the most satisfactory results.

The Language of Business Letters

Letters are of two main kinds: business letters and social letters. The letters which a secretary in a business office prepares are nearly all of the first kind. In social correspondence between friends a good deal of latitude is permitted in the choice of words and the arrangements of parts, but in the business letter it is necessary to follow conventional usage with greater strictness. The body of the business letter, however, sometimes offers scope for individuality of treatment, but business letters may not use slang and the freedom of treatment which are acceptable in letters between friends. Both business and social letters require the observance of good grammar and correct punctuation at all times.

In general terms, the most effective business letters are those which succeed best in combining cordiality with dignity. Such letters convey to the reader a sense of the sincerity and friendliness of the writer, and promote the objectives with which the letter is sent. Cordiality in business letters, however, degenerates into effusiveness if used to excess, sounding hollow and defeating its purpose of making the recipient desirous of cooperating with the writer.

The tone which business letters strive to achieve naturally varies according to the nature of the correspondence, and the social relationship between the writer and the reader. Courtesy and correctness are essential in all business correspondence, but the general tone will vary somewhat with the type of letter, depending upon whether an order for merchandise, a recommendation, a letter of information, an adjustment, or a sales letter is being written. An application for employment or a communication to an important governmental official is necessarily more formal and respectful than the ordinary business letter. Each sort of letter has a particular objective, and each should use the language and arrangement best suited for its attainment. Correspondence between people who have had a long business association in which an element of friendship may have entered usually is not as dignified and formal as correspondence between people who are communicating for the first time.

TRITE EXPRESSIONS.—The message of the letter should be expressed in simple and natural terms. There are dozens of conventional phrases which have become so hackneyed that they have ceased to have any meaning, while others are unduly brief. Both types should be avoided entirely, since they destroy the clarity of the letter and make it seem old-fashioned. A business letter should resemble neither a telegram nor an engraved invitation to tea. Hence it should not contain telescoped expressions like "the 15th inst." and "in re," or effusions of pretended gratitude such as "your esteemed favor" and "thanking you in advance." Instead, brevity should be the result of clear thinking and avoidance of repetition. Courtesy should pervade the message as a whole, rather than being injected here and there by the use of a trite phrase.

Below are listed some of the trite and objectionable phrases which should be avoided in modern business letters in the interest of concise and unaffected expression. Besides the ones listed, there are many others of a similar character which the alert person will learn to detect and avoid.

ADVISE. Should not be used in the sense of tell, or inform.

AND OBLIGE. Not in good taste.

APPRECIATE. Means to judge or estimate correctly. Should not be used for like, thank you for, feel kindly toward you for, etc.

AS PER. A correct phrase is according to.

AT HAND. Trite.

ATTACHED FIND. If it is attached, it will be found. It is better to say attached is.

ATTACHED HERETO. Hereto is superfluous.

BEG, OR BEG LEAVE. Trite, overworked, and useless.

BEG TO STATE, ADVISE, INFORM, ACKNOWLEDGE. To beg means to ask something for nothing. These expressions should be avoided.

CONTENTS CAREFULLY NOTED. One is expected to notice the contents of letters carefully. It is a waste of time to tell the correspondent that this has been done.

DICTATED BUT NOT READ. The letter of a correspondent who uses this expression ought to be returned with the notation "Received but not read."

ESTEEMED FAVOR. Only people are esteemed and a favor is a kindness.

FURTHER COMMANDS. This term is hackneyed.

HAND YOU. How can anything be handed to another in a letter? Send you is preferable.

HERewith. Superfluous. Enclose means as much as enclose herewith.

HOPING TO HEAR FROM YOU. This is usually taken for granted.

I HAVE BEFORE ME YOUR LETTER. The correspondent doesn't care where his letter is if it is given proper attention.

IN DUE COURSE. This is too indefinite.

IN RE. A Latin term meaning "concerning," or "in the matter of." Should not be used except in legal writing.

IN REPLY WISH TO STATE. This statement is a waste of time.

INST. An antiquated term for this month.

KIND, KINDLY. Overworked and trite.

PERMIT ME TO SAY. This is a needless prefix to an expression of opinion.

PROPOSITION. Business slang. It is better to say proposal, or undertaking.

PROX. The proper term is next month.

RECENT DATE. Letter should be referred to either by the exact date or the subject or by both.

SAME. Should not be used as a pronoun except in legal documents.

THANKING YOU IN ADVANCE. It is presumptuous to assume a request will be granted.

THE WRITER. The pronoun I is better because more direct.

THIS IS IN REPLY TO. Perfectly obvious from the contents of the letter.

ULT. A poor way of saying last month.

WISH TO SAY. Overworked, meaningless, and trite.

Five Essentials of Business-Letter English

The language used in every business letter, regardless of type, must contain five qualities which are indispensable in effective correspondence. These are:

1. Clearness
2. Conciseness
3. Completeness
4. Courtesy
5. Correctness

The writer who keeps these "Five C's" constantly in mind while composing the letter will find his task greatly simplified. Also, in reviewing the letter after it is drafted, he can estimate the value of his work according to the presence or absence of these qualities. The "Five C's" are the hallmarks of good modern correspondence, for their use distinguishes progressive letter-writing of the present from that of the past.

CLEARNESS.—A letter is first of all a message to a reader. If the reader does not grasp this message easily and thoroughly, the letter has failed in its purpose, no matter how correct its form or how attractive its appearance may be. Consequently the writer must make sure that the letter conveys a message in unmistakable terms.

Clarity in letters can be achieved by following a very simple yet important procedure. Before beginning the composition of the letter the writer must determine definitely what he wishes to say—whether or not he will order the materials, supply the information, give the recommendation, or do whatever else the reader has requested. If one waits until the actual writing of the letter to make these decisions, ambiguity and indecisiveness are almost certain to result. Although such a caution may appear obvious and needless, many letters are begun before the writers know what they are going to say.

After this first step, which is a matter of individual consideration for each case at hand, the writer must find the best words for expressing the message determined upon. Clearness in the actual writing is attained by care in the selection of words, and in the punctuation, the length and arrangement of sentences, and the paragraphing. It is important to avoid vague words or those subject to misinterpretation. Sentences should be as direct as possible, not weighed down by a burden of parenthetical expressions, subordinate clauses, or participial phrases. In addition, sentences in a business letter should be reasonably brief, though too many very short sentences in succession give an undesirable staccato effect. Both vocabulary and sentence structure must be adapted to the intelligence and education of the reader: greater simplicity is obviously required in a letter to a farmer or a housewife than in one to an editor or an instructor. The principles of good paragraphing must also be observed, so that each topic or group of related topics occupies a paragraph by itself.

CONCISENESS.—The man of business has so many claims on his limited time that he welcomes methods which conserve his working hours and energy. The best business letters, therefore, are those which enable him to grasp their message with the greatest ease and rapidity. Clearness in words and grammatical structure are means to this end; another is conciseness. Conciseness in writing consists in the omission of unessential matter, and the avoidance of repetition and of unduly lengthy modes of expression. It should be noted, however, that concise writing need not be incomplete nor discourteous writing. Really essential facts must not be overlooked, and the brusqueness which would result from the deletion of all expressions of cordiality and good will is undesirable. Without the usual pronouns and articles the language becomes clipped and telegraphic, as in the following instance, "Received yours of 29th ult."

The letter writer can find no better way to train himself in conciseness than to review his completed letters and note the number of phrases, words, and even whole sentences which could be left out without impairing the meaning of the whole.

COMPLETENESS.—The completeness of the message should never be sacrificed in an exaggerated effort to achieve brevity of expression. Every item which is essential must find its place in the letter, for omission of important details is likely to cause confusion. The writer's best way of working to avoid this difficulty is to check over the items he intends to mention before the letter is begun, making sure that he has in mind all the needed details and no more. The letter should be read through after it is written, to see if it complies with the requirements of completeness. If something has been forgotten, the letter should probably be rewritten, since details tacked on in a postscript are an admission that the letter was inexpertly drafted in the first place.

COURTESY.—Every successful business organization shows great courtesy in personal contacts with individuals and other companies, for much of its success depends on the esteem of its clients and associates. Courtesy in business letters is no less essential, especially in view of the permanence of written words.

There is a great difference, however, between true courtesy, which consistently takes into account the problems, needs, and feelings of the reader, and sham courtesy. The latter expresses itself in resounding phrases which do not truly represent the sentiments of the writer. Furthermore, exaggerated expressions of thanks and esteem are in poor taste, even if they are sincere.

Courtesy depends in part on a properly chosen salutation and complimentary close, but to a much greater degree on the language in the body of the letter. True consideration rests in the acts of the individual or company, but whether these favor or disfavor the reader's interests, they must be communicated in courteous terms. With skill, even collection letters or refusals to grant charge accounts can be stated with a minimum of chagrin to the reader. Business letters of this type should show respect for the dignity and character of the recipient, and should avoid imputing bad faith to him. Sarcasm and abuse should never appear in business letters of any kind, since they brand the writer as ill-bred, and antagonize the reader.

CORRECTNESS.—Correctness in the business letter is a requirement so absolute that without it the time spent in drafting a clear, well-phrased, and courteous message is hardly worth while, for a letter which contains errors in formal details furnishes but a sorry impression of the intelligence and character of the individual or firm which sends it. A carefully worded but carelessly transcribed letter is as ineffectual as a well-informed speaker with a severe stammer: neither the letter nor the speaker can win the favorable attention which the quality of their message deserves.

After the letter is composed, but before it is typewritten, it should be checked for its correctness in the following particulars: (1) grammar, (2) spelling, (3) capitalization, (4) punctuation, (5) the form of numerical expressions, (6) abbreviations. When it is ascertained that the letter is correct in these usages, it should be typewritten with care, that errors of fact do not creep in, and in accordance with the rules for spacing and the order of parts found in the following pages.

The Form of Business Letters

The letter's neat and pleasing appearance, like its correctness in details, enhances the value of skillful phrasing and offsets to some degree the bad effects of clumsy expression. Furthermore, clear-cut paragraph separations and proper spacing of the materials on the page permit quicker assimilation of the contents. Likewise, paper of good quality and a well-designed letterhead reflect credit on the writer.

The sheets of paper most commonly used in commercial correspondence, and those which best accommodate the business letter of average length are approximately $8\frac{1}{2}$ " x 11", though smaller sizes are used for some purposes. Most business stationery has an engraved or printed letterhead at the top of the sheet, bearing the name and address of the company. This letterhead should be well proportioned and should use faces of type which combine well. The typewriter ribbon should be black and must be fresh enough to make a clear imprint.

Carelessness in making erasures may produce smudges on the page which are hard to remove. These smudges can be avoided by use of a celluloid cutout which exposes only the letter or word to be erased. Typographical errors should not be struck over with the correct letter; instead the error should be carefully erased and the proper symbol typed in its place. Since it is difficult to insert the correction in exactly the right spot when the page has been removed from the typewriter and then replaced, it is best to read the letter over for errors before taking it out of the machine.

Few business letters run longer than one page. When they do, however, the bottom of the first sheet must not be crowded. The typist should never crowd a page to avoid using a second. The second sheet should bear the name of the reader, the page number, and the date, thus:

Mr. Ralph C. Roberts Page 2 June 30, 1963

Letterhead stationery is preferably not used for any pages after the first. Instead, plain paper should be used, of the same color and quality as the first page.

Carbon copies should be made of all letters, as a matter of course, and promptly filed. This practice makes the review of correspondence an easy matter, and is therefore essential in the smooth running of the office.

SPACING.—Proper spacing of the materials on the page has a great effect on the letter's legibility and attractiveness. The letter should be approximately centered on the page, but with the upper and left-hand margins slightly wider than the lower and right-hand margins. If the letter occupies a full page or more, the upper and left-hand margins should be not less than $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide, and the lower and right-hand margins not less than 1 inch wide. A shorter letter will require wider margins, but these should maintain the same proportions. The length of the lines also varies according to the length of the letter. A letter of 100 words or less presents the best appearance if the lines are about 40 characters long (counting both letters and the spaces between words). A letter containing from 100 to 150 words should have 50-character lines; one of more than 150 words should have 60-character lines. If the typewriter used has "elite" type (that is, type which measures 12 characters to the inch), letters exceeding 200 words in length should have 70-character lines; but if the typewriter has larger type than this, a line of 70 characters will be too long for the minimum margins of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch and 1 inch. Before the transcription of the letter is begun the typist should make an approximate estimate of its length and set the typewriter's margin guides accordingly.

The length of the letter determines not only the preferable width of the lines, but also the vertical spacing. If the letter is a very brief one, it is likely to appear lost in a sea of white paper. This may be avoided by increasing the number of blank lines between the various parts of the letter, so as to expand it vertically on the page. The area which the letter covers on the page may also be increased by double-spacing.

501 Shelby Street
Northfield, Vermont
June 30, 1963

Mr. Ralph C. Roberts
831 North Stacy Place
Jonesborough, Texas

In indented style each line begins a little more to the right than the line above it, thus:

501 Shelby Street
Northfield, Vermont
June 30, 1963

Mr. Ralph C. Roberts
831 North Stacy Place
Jonesborough, Texas

The application of block and indented styles to the paragraphs of the letter, and to the signature are explained in the sections BODY, p. 205, and SIGNATURE, p. 206.

OPEN AND CLOSED PUNCTUATION.—Two styles of punctuation are also acceptable. These are "open punctuation" and "closed punctuation." The first of these is much used at the present time. It uses no punctuation marks at the ends of lines except to indicate that a word is abbreviated. In "closed punctuation" the suitable punctuation marks close each line. It should be noted, however, that these distinctions of style do not apply to the body of the letter, which is always punctuated according to the rules applying to other types of writing. Furthermore, even in open punctuation it is customary to follow the salutation with a colon, and the complimentary close with a comma.

The foregoing examples of block and indented style have "open punctuation." The following is an example of "closed punctuation" applied to heading, address, salutation, and complimentary close:

501 North Shelby Street,
Northfield, Vermont,
June 30, 1963

Mr. Ralph C. Roberts,
831 North Stacy Place,
Jonesborough, Texas.

Dear Mr. Roberts:

(Body of the letter)

Very truly yours,

Whichever method of punctuation and indentation is used must be applied consistently throughout the entire letter except the body. If the heading is in indented style with closed punctuation, the address and the complimentary close must follow the same form. The addresses on the envelope must also be uniform in treatment with the letter inside.

The Parts of Business Letters

Besides the envelope, the business letter consists of six main parts, usually found in the following order: (1) heading, (2) the inside address or introduction, (3) the salutation, (4) the body, (5) the complimentary close, (6) the signature.

HEADING.—The heading consists of the name and address of the individual or organization, and the date. Most companies use letterhead stationery which has the name and the address at the top of the sheet. To complete the heading the date must be added. It may be placed either at the top beneath the letterhead, or, according to more conservative practice, a little below the letterhead but to the right, so that it is even with the right-hand margin of the body of the letter to follow. If letterhead stationery is not used, the entire heading should be typed in the upper right-hand corner, and should contain street address, city, state, and date in the order given.

Figures should not be used for the month or two digits for the year. No letters such as "st," "rd," or "th," should follow the day of the month. Correct and incorrect forms of the date line are illustrated as follows:

INCORRECT

INSIDE ADDRESS.—The inside address or introduction of the letter follows the same form as the address on the envelope. It should contain the name, street address, city, and state of the person to whom the letter is sent. Usually the name occupies the first line, the street address the second, and the city and state the third. If the name of the company is given to which the individual addressed belongs, this occupies the second line, all succeeding lines being pushed down. Sometimes the company itself is addressed, in which case the company name forms the first line. The name of a well-known office building or hotel sometimes supplements or replaces the street address.

The business title of the individual, indicating the position he holds in an organization, always follows the name, either on the same line or on the line below. The only words which precede the name are such terms of respect as "Mr.," "Mrs.," or "Miss," and the titles showing professional standing, like "Dr.," "Professor," and "The Reverend." Exceptions to this practice which may occur in addressing people of elevated position are listed under FORMS OF ADDRESS FOR GOVERNMENT AND ECCLESIASTICAL OFFICIALS, p. 210. The term "Esq.," which is used for lawyers in England, and occasionally used in a general sense in the United States, always follows the name. In this case no title precedes the name. Two titles are not used for a single name.

The following examples illustrate correct and incorrect forms for the name line of the inside address:

INCORRECT

The preceding examples show the variety of ways in which the inside address may be treated. In friendly correspondence it is usually omitted entirely, so that the salutation directly follows the heading. In government correspondence and some very formal letters the inside address is frequently placed below the signature, at the lower left-half corner of the page. The usual practice, however, is one of those indicated above.

SALUTATION.—The salutation marks the formal opening of the letter after the sender's and reader's addresses have been written. It begins at the left-hand margin, usually two spaces below the inside address, from which it is thus separated. It is followed by a colon, or in friendly letters by a comma. Users of the open punctuation system sometimes use no punctuation mark after the salutation, but the use of the colon is more general.

The choice of the salutation depends on the relationship between the writer and the reader of the letter. In ordinary business correspondence, moderately dignified salutations are desirable, unless the relationship has developed into a warmly personal one, when considerable informality is permissible. Special forms of address are used in writing to government officials; these are listed in FORMS OF ADDRESS FOR GOVERNMENT AND ECCLESIASTICAL OFFICIALS, p. 210.

The salutations suitable for various situations are as follows:

For addressing a company—
Gentlemen: (formal or informal)

For addressing a group of women—

Ladies: (formal or informal)

Mesdames: (formal)

For addressing an individual—

My dear Mr. O'Hara: (formal)

My dear Miss Foster: (formal)

Dear Sir: (moderately informal)

Dear Madam: (moderately informal)

Dear Mr. O'Hara: (moderately informal)

Dear Miss Foster: (moderately informal)

For addressing close acquaintances, and rarely used in business correspondence—

Dear Tom, (:) (very informal)

Dear Beatrice, (:) (very informal)

Dear O'Hara, (:) (very informal)

The writer should observe that the word "dear" in a salutation is capitalized only if it is the first word in the phrase. All other words used in salutations are capitalized wherever they occur. The only abbreviations used in salutations are "Mr.," "Mrs.," "Dr.," and "Rev."

A letter addressed directly to an organization as such should use the salutation "Gentlemen." However, if the writer wishes the matter to receive the attention of a particular individual in the firm, this is accomplished by the phrase "Attention of Mr.—," written either on the same line as the salutation, or else below it to the right, thus:

Simmons and Tate, Inc.
803 Clinton Court
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Attention of Mr. John Harris

or thus:

Simmons and Tate, Inc.
803 Clinton Court
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:
Attention of Mr. John Harris

BODY.—The body of the letter is the portion which contains the message. It begins one or two lines below the salutation.

There are two methods of typing the body: double-spaced and single-spaced. The choice of one or the other depends on the preference of the individual or firm, as well as on the amount of material in the letter, which affects the spacing. Materials intended to be printed, however, should always be double-spaced, to facilitate the work of the editor and the compositor.

If the body is double-spaced, the beginning of each paragraph must be indented so as to be clearly marked off from neighboring paragraphs. Paragraph divisions are made still more evident by leaving one or two blank lines between paragraphs, in addition to the indentation at the beginning. However, the use of blank lines is optional in double-spaced matter.

If the body of the letter is single-spaced, paragraphs may begin flush with the left-hand margin, or indentations may be used if preferred. In either case the paragraphs must be separated from one another by one or more blank lines between them.

The block style of paragraphing is particularly suitable when the heading and the inside address are blocked. But when these parts of the letter are put in indented style, indented paragraph beginnings achieve a desirable effect of uniformity.

Regardless of the method of punctuation employed in the heading and inside address, the body of the letter must be punctuated in conformity with the punctuation rules in this book.

Following are four examples of the different ways the body of the letter may be spaced on the letterhead:

Double-spaced indented paragraphs with no blank lines between them:

Double-spaced indented paragraphs with blank line between them:

Single-spaced indented paragraphs with blank line between them:

Single-spaced paragraphs in block style, with blank line between them:

If the body of the letter contains an address for the information of the reader, it is helpful to make this stand out prominently for convenience in reference. This may be accomplished by putting it in the same form as the inside address of the letter, but centered on the page, as in this example:

For additional details we advise you to communicate with America's foremost authority in this field:

Dr. Franz A. Heiden
193 Wall Street
New York, N.Y.

We feel confident he can furnish the information you require.

COMPLIMENTARY CLOSE.—The complimentary close is a formal expression of regard with which the writer takes leave of the reader. It follows the body of the letter, occupying a line by itself, two or more lines below the last line of the body. It should begin at the middle of the page, or slightly to the right of the middle.

The use of a particular phrase for the complimentary close, like the salutation, depends on the relationship between the sender and the receiver. The complimentary close should be consistent with the salutation in the degree of its formality.

The most frequently encountered complimentary closes for business correspondence are as follows:

Respectfully yours, (very formal, and used principally for government officials and people in superior positions)
Very truly yours, (moderately formal)

Yours very truly, (moderately formal)
Yours truly, (moderately formal)
Sincerely yours, (informal; most used in business correspondence between well-acquainted persons)
Cordially yours, (informal; most used in business correspondence between well-acquainted persons)

The complimentary closes of friendly letters are less subject to rule than those of business letters, many being devised by the writer. In some friendly letters the complimentary close is omitted.

The complimentary close should have only its first letter capitalized, and should contain no abbreviations. It should not be attached to the preceding sentence or follow such stereotyped expressions as "I beg to remain," "Believe me to be," and "Hoping for a prompt reply I am . . ." It is usually followed by a comma, even when open punctuation is used, though it is sometimes omitted in the latter case.

SIGNATURE.—The signature of the business letter contains the name of the individual, the name of the organization, or both. Sometimes the position of the individual in the organization is also included.

The signature is typewritten from two to several lines below the complimentary close, the number of blank lines depending on the need of compressing or expanding the materials on the page. If the inside address follows block style, the one or more lines of the signature are lined up evenly under the complimentary close; but if the inside address follows indented style, it is preferable to begin the signature a little to the right of the complimentary close, with additional indentions for each succeeding line.

Complimentary close and signature in block style:

Very truly yours,

ECONOMY FUEL COMPANY
(Signature)
Harrison J. Watts, Vice President

Complimentary close and signature in indented style:

Very truly yours,

ECONOMY FUEL COMPANY
(Signature)
Harrison J. Watts, Vice President

If the signer of the letter wishes to indicate that he is writing as an individual, his name should precede the firm name; but if he is writing merely as a representative of the firm, the firm name should precede.

When letterhead paper is used, the firm name is often omitted from the signature. The firm name in the signature, when included, is sometimes written in capital letters to give it prominence.

It is necessary that the reader should know the exact name of the individual writing the letter, so that his reply may reach the proper person. Since the scrawl with which names are sometimes written in signatures is confusing, it is courteous to have the name of the person typewritten below the handwritten signature. It is also helpful to the reader to know the writer's position in the firm. This may be added after the typewritten personal name, either on the same line or on the next line below. The statement of position should not be added to the handwritten signature, however.

Alternative methods of indicating official position:

(Handwritten signature)

Roscoe J. Blair, Registrar

or

(Handwritten signature)

Roscoe J. Blair

Registrar

An individual should always sign his name the same way in all business correspondence. The first and middle names may be either written in full or written as initials only. A woman may wish to indicate whether she is married or single. If she is single, the word (Miss) may precede her signature; if she is married the word "Mrs." in parentheses may precede the signature, or her married name may be typewritten beneath the signature as shown below:

(Miss) Francis K. Graham

(Mrs.) Alice C. White

or

Alice C. White

(Mrs. John White)

Neither the handwritten nor the typewritten portions of the signature should contain personal titles such as "Mr.," "Rev.," "Dr.," or "Professor"; or academic degrees such as "M.A.," "Ph.D.," or "LL.D." The only exception to this rule is the use in parentheses of a title indicating the marital status of a woman, as noted in the previous paragraph and shown in the example above.

Three additional letter parts which require consideration, though they do not appear in all business letters, are the postscript, the identification letters, and the notice of enclosure.

POSTSCRIPT.—Postscripts are seldom used in well-written business letters, since their use is an evidence of confused thinking on the part of the composer of the letter, who only remembered to include an essential detail after the letter was typewritten. If the postscript is necessary, however, it should be added several lines below the signature, preceded by the letters "P.S."

IDENTIFICATION LETTERS.—The identification letters are the initials of the writer of the letter, and those of the secretary who transcribed it. The initials of the writer always come first. Identification letters are placed in the lower left-hand corner of the page, on one line or on two, and in any of the following forms:

RJMcM/EMP MDE AK,SED
PEQ:ls GF

NOTICE OF ENCLOSURE.—The notice of enclosure informs the reader that something additional to the text of the letter is enclosed within the envelope, and must be looked for. The words "Encl." or "Enclosure" are written in the lower left-hand corner, just below the identification letters. If there is more than one enclosure, the number should be stated, as:

RJMcM/EMP
Enclosures (3)

ENVELOPE.—The envelope should be clean, carefully typed, and well spaced, because it comes first to the attention of the reader and may give him a favorable or unfavorable impression of the contents.

For business letters both the sender's and the receiver's addresses should appear on the face of the envelope, though in writing friendly letters the return address is sometimes placed on the back flap. Most business letters use letterhead envelopes with the sender's return address in the upper left-hand corner; on plain envelopes this information is typewritten in the same location.

The address to which the letter is being sent (also called the superscription), should begin about halfway down the envelope, and slightly to the left of the middle. It should usually contain the same information as the inside address, with which it should be uniform in using the block or indented style. The name of the county may be added after the name of the community if the latter is small or little-known. Abbreviations should be avoided whenever possible, since "Va." and "Pa.," and "Mass.," "Miss.," and "Minn." are easily confused.

If the address is in an office building or hotel, the number of the room or suite may

Forms of Address for Government and Ecclesiastical Officials

Letters addressed to people in high positions in governmental or religious organizations require the use of special forms for the address, the salutation, or the complimentary close; or sometimes for all three. Various expressions with different degrees of formality are possible in some cases, as indicated below.

The inside address in a letter to a government official may be placed either before the salutation, as in most business letters, or in the lower left-hand corner of the page below the level of the signature.

Two terms which should be used with special care are "the Honorable" and "the Reverend." Since they are adjectives rather than titles, they must be followed by the first name, the initials, or the appropriate title, rather than by the surname alone. They are usually abbreviated to "Hon." and "Rev." if the word "the" is omitted. Examples:

OFFICE ROUTINE

An effective office routine is based on common sense. It is no different from the routine used by a clear thinking and efficient individual in his personal affairs, except that it has greater scope and is adapted to the needs of a business and the workers who compose it. An orderly individual makes memoranda of approaching tasks and appointments, keeps a careful watch on bills, money orders, and bank statements, files away important letters, documents, and receipts in such a fashion that he can find them again easily, makes careful plans before traveling, and in general tries to dispatch the business of life with a minimum of bother and error. The same is true of an efficient office. Time is a precious commodity, and hours saved from routine can be devoted effectually to more important efforts.

This does not mean that all office routines are perfect. In some there is considerable hampering red tape and "system for system's sake." In others carelessness and laxity are conspicuous. It does mean, however, that an effective routine is intelligible to anyone who has common sense and is acquainted with the business in question. If things are done in a certain way, there is usually a sound reason. If certain rules are enforced and precautions taken, they are usually necessary. If a person wishes to understand any phase of office routine, he should try to determine the reason for it. Naturally a new worker will have to follow some routines blindly until he gets a chance to think them out. In the long run common-sense understanding makes for a better worker than does automatic, unreasoned obedience. This is especially true for the secretary, from whom a considerable degree of initiative is frequently expected.

There is, of course, considerable variation in method from office to office. Each business has its own individual problems, and each executive his own ideas about efficiency. Nevertheless, business organizations have many general principles of operation in common. They are all part of the same economic order, and the laws of common sense hold true for all of them.

The Secretary's Work

The secretary is an important figure in modern business. She performs a variety of duties, many of them demanding independent thought and decision. Her treatment of callers and handling of business letters help to establish the tone of a firm. She is to a large degree responsible for the smooth functioning of the executive or executives to whom she may be specially assigned. Her position is that of an important minor hub, around which the wheels of office routine revolve.

The secretary, although she must usually be a good stenographer, is much more than that. The stenographer takes dictation in shorthand and transcribes it on the typewriter into the characters of the alphabet; to be able to do this, she must in addition be an expert typist. She is judged by her reliability, accuracy, and speed. Her work, though essential, is decidedly limited when compared to that of the secretary.

The term secretary is a flexible one. It is applied to the general stenographic assistant and receptionist of the individual executive or professional man—in short, the private secretary. Such a secretary may sometimes be shared between two or more executives, performing like services for each. In committees, institutions, clubs, and other non-business organizations the term secretary is frequently applied to an important individual who performs all the actual work attendant on executing orders and decrees. This is in some ways similar to the secretary in the small office, who may be responsible for all office routine, or to the general secretary of a large office, who may have some of the duties of an office manager.

There are certain types of work which the business-office secretary will almost certainly be called upon to perform. These are (1) the opening and sorting of incoming mail; (2) the taking of dictation; (3) the transcription of shorthand; (4) the dispatch of outgoing mail; (5) the filing of letters and other materials; (6) the making of appointments; (7) the handling of callers and of telephone calls; (8) running errands. But there are many other types of work which the secretary may be called upon to learn and execute, among them the following: (1) the arrangement, in part, of her employer's schedule; (2) reading mail and drafting replies to routine letters; (3) organization and management of one or more filing systems and indexes; (4) clipping newspapers; (5) interviewing callers; (6) planning itineraries; (7) ordering office supplies; (8) handling petty cash, stamps, etc.; (9) making bank deposits; (10) writing checks and paying bills; (11) checking bank statements.

Few secretaries have to perform all these duties. Some, on the other hand, may be expected to handle these and more. There is no listing all possible duties, since each business may have special ones attached to it. The secretary attempting to master her job and improve her efficiency has three reliable guides: the instructions of her employer, her experience, and her common sense. This section is intended as an introduction to those secretarial duties which are common to many offices. For a general discussion of the personality qualifications of the secretary, the reader is referred to the sections THE SUCCESSFUL SECRETARY, p. 228, and ETIQUETTE FOR BUSINESS MEN AND WOMEN, p. 224.

Adjusting to a New Job

When the secretary is acquainting herself with the routine of a new position, it is a good idea for her to make a list of all tasks required, with memoranda of detailed procedures involved in the more important work. Just as her employer has a daily schedule, which it may become her duty to arrange, so she ought to keep a similar daily schedule for herself, with reminders of future work, etc. She should also make a list of essential telephone numbers, and of the names of individuals and firms with which her employer comes in contact. Naturally many of these things will soon become a part of her memory, but lists are very helpful in the beginning.

Good work cannot be done in unpleasant or uncomfortable surroundings. The responsibility for such matters lies chiefly with the employer. Nevertheless, the new secretary should keep her desk neat and clean, try to obtain a swivel chair and adjust it to the most comfortable height, seek to avoid stuffy atmosphere and draughts, and do whatever else she is able in order to improve her working conditions. Her employer should appreciate this, since it increases her efficiency.

The following outline of the duties of the secretary is arranged for convenience in the order in which the tasks might ordinarily occur during the day.

The Executive's Schedule

The working hours of the modern executive must be apportioned carefully if he is to discharge his duties efficiently and advance the interests of his firm. For this purpose a series of written memoranda, entered on a desk pad or file cards, is much more reliable than memory. Many secretaries are responsible for such memoranda, and all secretaries should become familiar with the system their employer uses.

The executive's schedule contains two types of entries: (1) reminders of daily appointments and other important non-routine business; (2) "ticklers" or reminders that preparations should be made for matters that are coming up shortly, such as taxes or bills requiring payment, conferences at which a report or set of suggestions will have to be produced, or interviews necessitating special preparation. A "tickler"—so-called because it is intended to jog or "tickle" the memory—is entered on the schedule a suitable number of days before the coming event to which it refers. If it is taken care of, it is crossed off the schedule. If not, a similar entry is made for the following day, and so on until it is taken care of. Naturally reminders and ticklers are usually both entered on the same schedule, since they are closely related.

Whether such entries are made on desk pads, index cards, or in folders depends on their number and complexity. In any case the executive almost always keeps a desk pad, frequently divided into sections for each hour of the working day, on which both he and the secretary enter his daily appointments. Such a pad is handy to use, allowing appointments to be entered at the moment they are made. Tickler entries may also be made on the desk pad, but are usually kept on a separate pad or set of cards.

Too often the sheets of desk pads are torn off and discarded. As these sheets are a valuable record, some form of desk pad should be used which allows the sheets to be turned under or to one side from day to day.

The secretary often finds it advisable to keep a desk pad of her own, on which are entered those things she has been delegated to do and the things of which she is to remind her employer. The competent secretary has the knack of writing entries in a form which is clear and concise. It is unnecessary, for example, to preface each entry with the phrase "Remember to . . ." But no entry should be so brief as to be puzzling when referred to again after a few hours or days.

A tickler file consists of a set of cards, usually about thirty in number, one for each day of the month. At the end of each day, the card for that day is taken out and filed elsewhere, after the entries have either been crossed off or transferred to the card for the following day. At the same time a new card is added at the end of the file, thus keeping the number of cards in the file constant.

Another type of tickler file consists of a set of folders, again one for each day. Each folder contains notations of coming events and the documents such as tax bills, inventory forms, letters, etc., which bear on them. This is a convenient system for the executive, permitting him to lay his hands on the pertinent documents without delay, whenever he has a spare moment in which he can cast his thoughts ahead.

Handling Incoming Mail

In a small organization one person may open and sort all the mail. In a large organization mail for executives may be handled only by their secretaries. In either case, it is essential the mail be opened in such a way that there is little chance of tearing the contents or of throwing away enclosures with the envelopes. When the contents have been shaken away from the end to be opened, the envelope is slit with a paper knife. After the contents have been removed, the envelope may be cut on three sides and the interior examined to prevent the loss of enclosures, which should be clipped to the covering letter, if that has not already been done by the sender.

An entire delivery of mail should be opened at one time. When the letters have been opened, the next task is to sort them according to the nature of their contents. The custom of the office will determine the precise method of sorting, just as it will decide whether the secretary is to open letters marked "personal" or "confidential." As a rule advertisements and circulars are grouped together, orders are collected into another group, and routine correspondence is placed in a category by itself. Personal mail and letters requiring special handling are segregated from all other groups.

In a small office the secretary who opens the mail ordinarily distributes it among the individuals concerned. In a large office where the secretary is serving one executive, all the mail is placed on his desk, arranged according to the order of its importance, with the most urgent business at the top. Ordinarily the circulars and advertisements, being least important, would be placed at the bottom.

Some secretaries may be required to read incoming mail carefully, underline important matters to bring them to the executive's attention, and answer routine letters.

Taking Dictation

Success in taking dictation depends on a thorough knowledge of shorthand and English, but the ability of the stenographer and the person giving dictation to work together smoothly is also of vital importance. The stenographer—or secretary doing stenographic work—should behave in a manner that is tactful, thoughtful, courteous, and businesslike. She should sit facing the person giving dictation, her notebook supported on the desk or some other firm surface. Most business men do not like to dictate to a person whose attention seems to be concentrated elsewhere. Neither do they like to have their flow of thought interrupted by a person who habitually anticipates words or constantly interrupts. The competent stenographer shows an intelligent interest in the executive's words. In taking fast dictation she learns to concentrate separately on each word spoken, waiting for a pause before reviewing their meaning.

The secretary prepares to take dictation as soon as she has finished opening and sorting the mail. Notebooks and sharpened pencils should always be kept in the same, readily accessible place, so that there will be no delay in reporting for dictation. Several pencils should be taken into the executive's office, so that the breaking of a pencil point cannot cause loss of time. Filled pages in the notebook should be fastened together with a rubber band, so that the proper beginning page can be found immediately. Notes and notebooks should always be conspicuously dated, in order that quick reference can be made to past dictation—something the executive may frequently desire to do. Most offices require all stenographers to keep a file of their filled notebooks for at least one year. Even when this is not an office rule, it is a good practice, since stenographers' notebooks are a valuable record of past business transactions.

If, when taking dictation, the stenographer misses words or finds them confused, she may call attention to the matter by repeating the last word or phrase spoken. Or she may mark uncertain portions of her notes, and ask questions about them when the piece of dictation is finished. Pauses during dictation may be utilized in adding to and completing notes, and in reading through those which have been taken. Such readings help to fix the meaning of the notes and make the task of transcription easier. If a visitor enters the room and the executive breaks off dictating, it is customary for the stenographer to leave, unless specifically requested to remain.

Special attention should be given during dictation to dates, numbers, and unfamiliar names. Accuracy being essential, the person giving dictation should allow the stenographer time to write these out in full.

If the dictation is too rapid, it is perfectly permissible for the secretary to request a more moderate pace. Most executives prefer such requests and questions about wording to the alternative presented by spoiled stationery and time wasted through enforced retyping.

Transcribing Shorthand

No system of shorthand is infallible in practice. Therefore shorthand notes cannot be transcribed automatically. Constant exercise of thought and judgment is necessary. It is a good idea to read each letter quickly before beginning to type it, in order to get a general idea of the contents. Then each sentence should be read for meaning and consistency before being typed out. This avoids erasures. It is wise to check dates and names against either enclosures or previous correspondence. Meaningless or ridiculous sentences should not be written in, but questioned; otherwise retyping will obviously be necessary. Doubtful material should be questioned, or at least indicated by a light-penciled question mark in the margin. The extent to which the stenographer may correct or improve wording depends entirely on the office and executive. In any case, she should watch out for excessive verbiage and words awkwardly repeated, since many dictators when groping for words tend to throw in unnecessary phrases.

In doing transcription, immediate attention should be given to telegrams, special instructions, and the like. Such notes should be prominently marked to distinguish them from the others. Telegrams should be transcribed and sent before letters are transcribed.

The transcriber should not hesitate to consult the dictionary and other authoritative works when in doubt. It is essential that the letter be cast in a proper form and effectively arranged on the page, and that the rules of proper spelling and good English be followed. For information on the form, arrangement, style, and content of business letters, the reader is referred to the section LETTER WRITING, p. 198; for grammar and construction, to the section MODERN ENGLISH USAGE, p. 155.

Unless otherwise instructed, the transcriber should always make at least one carbon copy of each letter, usually for filing with correspondence. Sometimes additional carbon copies will be needed, especially in the case of orders, instructions, etc. If more than four carbon copies are to be made, a typewriter with a hard platen should be used; otherwise the lower carbons will not be legible.

Before submitting letters for signature, the transcriber should assure herself that they are true copies of the shorthand notes, and that the typing is mechanically correct. The work of a good typist differs radically from that of an amateur. In addition to speed, it shows accuracy, uniformity of impression (all the characters being struck with equal force, so that they are alike in degree of blackness), and a pleasing arrangement of lines and margins.

Copy Typing

It is always possible to make mistakes when transcribing shorthand notes or in interpreting the words of a person giving dictation, but in copying materials already typed or printed the secretary is expected to do a perfect job. There is no excuse for mistaking definite words and characters.

Since such copies are usually of documents, contracts, letters received, and the like, absolute accuracy is essential. Copies should always be headed by the word "Copy" in parentheses, and any signatures should be preceded by "signed," also in parentheses. Unless the secretary is instructed otherwise, all apparent errors in the original should be copied faithfully. It is a common practice, however, to place an asterisk (*) after such errors and, at the bottom of the page, another asterisk, followed by a footnote explaining that the error occurs in the original. In the most strict variety of this work, such as that performed in legal offices, it may be necessary to copy line for line and page for page. All copy typing should be proofread against the original for errors.

Typing clean copies of rough drafts made by someone in the firm is quite a different matter, and the secretary is usually permitted to make corrections in spelling and grammar. If the meaning of some phrase cannot be determined, she should not hesitate to consult the writer.

Drafting Letters

In some offices it is part of the secretary's job to prepare replies to routine letters. She should learn to decide quickly which letters are routine and which are not. Her answers should be clearly reasoned and to the point. The general instructions contained in the section LETTER WRITING, p. 198, should be followed. According to the common procedure, she submits her replies to her employer for reading or signature at the same time that she shows him the incoming letters. This arrangement saves time.

Handling Outgoing Mail

Presuming that the letter has been typed and read, and the envelope typed, there are still certain precautions that the secretary should automatically take. She should make sure that the address on the envelope is identical with that given in the heading of the letter. She should assure herself that the letter has been signed. Finally, she should glance through the letter to ascertain what enclosures there are supposed to be, and then check the enclosures accordingly.

The letter should be neatly folded in such a way that it occupies most of the envelope but leaves ample space for opening the letter without danger of tearing the contents. Small supplementary folds made at the last minute have an ugly and untidy appearance. There is no excuse for them. The secretary should determine beforehand the most graceful way of folding all sizes of paper used in her office. Enclosures should usually be clipped to the letter, in order to avoid being lost. If pressure must be applied in sealing an envelope, it is advisable to place a sheet of paper over the flap, in order to avoid smudges. The stamp should be affixed securely, after it is checked for correct value.

To expedite business transactions, it is important that letters be mailed promptly. The accomplished secretary knows the times at which letters are collected from the box used by her office, and plans the mailing of batches of letters accordingly. If speed is essential, letters may be sent straight to the main post-office, and letters or packages may be sent direct to local destinations by messenger.

Detailed information on postal regulations, methods, and rates is contained in the section POSTAL INFORMATION, p. 221, to which the reader is referred.

Filing Systems

In an efficient office, all materials pertaining to business transactions are made readily available for reference by a suitable filing system. The backbone of the system is almost always a correspondence file, consisting of folders, one for each separate firm or individual with whom there are business dealings—customers, creditors, manufacturers, advertising agencies, etc. Each folder contains letters received from the firm in question, carbon copies of letters sent in reply, and other pertinent documents, such as advertising matter and reports on interviews and conferences. The contents of each folder are arranged in the order of their dates, and therefore tell a complete, coherent story of vital importance to a business man wishing to review for one purpose or another the stages in a set of transactions.

The secretary may be responsible for keeping such a file in order and up to date. In any case it will be necessary for her to file carbon copies of the letters which she has written for her employer. She may frequently be called upon to find material in the files.

The arrangement of items (folders, in the case of the correspondence file) is almost always alphabetical. There is a detailed discussion of this method in the section FILING BY ALPHABET, p. 196. Other arrangements include the geographical, in which firms are grouped by regions, a method convenient for sales campaigns and distributions; the numerical; and the Dewey Decimal Classification, familiar in libraries. The two latter methods are seldom used in business offices.

Cardboard guides are used to separate the folders in a file. These guides bear identification tabs, facilitating the locating of material. It is more convenient to file material in front of the guide referring to it, but the system of filing behind the guides is still used in many offices.

A large file is generally accompanied by a card index, in which each folder is represented by a corresponding card bearing the name of the firm or individual. If a firm is known by several different names, or different forms of the same name, there are cross reference cards; as, for example, "Corrugated Box and Fiberboard, Inc. Look under: Midwestern Corrugated Box and Fiberboard" or "Antiquarian Society of America. See American Antiquarian Society." Similar cross-reference cards would be used if the correspondence for two related firms happened to be filed in the same folder. Use of an index does away with time wasted in long searches through the bulkier files. For a small file, however, an index is seldom worth the time taken in maintaining it.

There are many supplementary files and indexes used in business offices. These may include mailing lists, lists of customers and prospective customers, files of newspapers and magazine clippings, legal documents, receipts, orders, employee records, indexes of references to books, and the like. In large offices each executive maintains an individual file of matters pertaining to his special province, and this file is usually kept in order by his private secretary.

A mailing list of any size is best kept on a series of cards, one for each firm or individual, rather than on typewritten sheets. Then names can be added to or dropped from the list without the need for a lengthy retyping and without disturbing the convenient alphabetical order. For similar reasons, card indexes of the names of customers and "prospects" are advisable. These may also be classified according to the item in which the customer is most interested, cards of a different color being used for this purpose; for example, a firm dealing in hardware might list purchasers of kitchen utensils on green cards, purchasers of tools on yellow cards, general purchasers on white cards, etc. Then if a special sales campaign for one type of product were undertaken, the appropriate cards could quickly be removed from the file.

There are certain general suggestions as to efficient filing:

(1) A file or index is only valuable if kept up to date. Otherwise it is a source of error and confusion. When a firm changes its name or address, a new card should be made out immediately, and correspondence transferred to a new folder.

(2) Care should be taken to list firms according to their complete, official name.

(3) If there is doubt as to where an item should most properly be filed, the quickest thing to do is to file it arbitrarily in one place and then make out a number of cross-reference cards.

(4) Preliminary to being filed, material may be kept in a general "suspense folder." However, the contents of the suspense folder should be filed at the earliest possible date; otherwise it will quickly become larger than the file itself. Instead of a single suspense folder, several may be used, one for each type of material, thus allowing for a certain amount of preliminary filing.

(5) In a large firm it is generally advisable for employees taking material from the files to sign a note to that effect, thus guarding against the loss of folders and making it easy to locate materials temporarily out of the files. If a folder is to be kept out for some time, it should be replaced with an "out card" the same size as the folder, thus quickly indicating to another searcher that the material has not been lost or filed elsewhere.

(6) Letters and other related papers are less bulky if stapled rather than clipped together.

(7) Bulky material, such as catalogues, samples, and pamphlets, should be kept in a separate file or case, with cross-reference cards indicating the location.

(8) The drawers of a filing cabinet should be kept closed when not in immediate use, and locked when the office is empty.

(9) The materials most frequently referred to should be kept where most easily reached, usually in the upper file-drawers rather than in those next to the floor.

(10) If several different folder files are in use in an office, it is well to mark the folders constituting each file with tabs of the same color, thus preventing folders from being returned to the wrong file.

The Treatment of Callers

It is the secretary's duty to learn the nature of the caller's business. Having learned it, she must decide on the basis of her past experience whether it is such as to be of interest to her employer and whether to send the caller in at once or make an appointment for him to see her employer at some other time. In many cases she may have to consult with her employer before arriving at a decision.

Many employers wish their secretaries to act as buffers between them and callers they are unable or unwilling to see. Secretaries in this rather uncomfortable position are required to exercise a good deal of tact and patience. A secretary who can perform such a difficult task well, and who, in addition, can transact business with routine callers without referring them to her employer at all, is a very great asset to a business. There is a further discussion of these problems in the section ETIQUETTE FOR BUSINESS MEN AND WOMEN, p. 224.

Many offices keep a daily list of callers, each entry ordinarily including the name of the caller, his business connections, and the errand on which he called. The lists are usually filed and retained as a semi-permanent record. Even when office rules do not require such a list to be kept, some secretaries make them because they are of value as records of transactions and because they serve to acquaint the secretary with the people who frequent the office.

The handling of telephone calls is essentially the same as the handling of callers. In both cases the secretary's duty is to learn the caller's business in as brief and courteous a way as possible, and then to refer the call in the manner determined by her experience. A cheerful voice creates a good impression. If a call must be kept waiting for some time before being answered by the person to whom it is referred, it is a good idea for the secretary to make occasional reassuring remarks so that the caller will not feel he has been forgotten or slighted. It is a good practice to keep a list of telephone calls similar to the list of those who call in person.

Appointments and Itineraries

In addition to scheduling her employer's day at the office, the secretary may be required to make arrangements for his time spent outside the office—visits to other firms, extended trips for the purpose of sales and conferences, and the like. For this purpose it is desirable that she have a good working knowledge of local transportation facilities, general traveling conditions, and her employer's personal preferences in such matters. Naturally she should consult him when in doubt, but if she performs her task sensibly and efficiently, he may come to rely greatly on her judgment.

In making appointments, courtesy and the dignity of her firm are important considerations. Where possible, appointments should be definite rather than tentative, and arranged by one phone call rather than several. This makes for efficient routine. It often proves advisable to combine business and social dates, as by having the meeting include a luncheon. There are certain hours of the working day during which an executive can best afford to be absent from the office; such hours, often those of the afternoon, are most suitable for outside appointments. Before leaving for his appointment he will usually want to refresh his mind by going over recent correspondence with the person he is going to meet. Therefore the appropriate folder should be on hand, together with notes on plans or proposals which he may wish to discuss. It is often a part of the secretary's duties to bring such matters to his attention.

The preparing of an itinerary for an extended trip is a more complicated task, usually involving the purchase of railroad or airway tickets, making hotel reservations, and making appointments in advance by letter or telegram. The secretary will need to rely to a considerable extent on the advice of travel bureaus, though she should always adopt an arrangement suited to her employer's preferences and convenience. It is wise for her to have timetables on hand, though great care should be taken to renew these whenever there is a change of schedules; otherwise they will prove a source of error. In general, all arrangements should be checked on by telephone or letter. Hotel reservations may be made by letter. The accomplished secretary familiarizes herself with the travel and hotel facilities in those regions to which her employer's business interests are apt to carry him.

In planning itineraries economy of time and movement is essential. If several cities are to be visited, appointments should be made in such an order as to involve the least amount of traveling; here a knowledge of the geography of the locality is essential.

After the itinerary has been planned, it should be drawn up on paper. A brief one may indicate only the hours of arrival and departure for each day, along with information as to the name of the railroad line, the station, and number of the car in which reservation has been made. Railroads and airways will furnish such an itinerary made out in full. A more complete itinerary indicates hotel reservations, time and place of appointments, names of individuals to be met, notes on matters to be discussed, plans and suggestions, subsidiary matters to be taken up if there is time available, local transportation arrangements, etc. Such an itinerary is chiefly for the convenience of the traveler, but copies should always be kept at the home office. Then it will be possible to get in touch with the traveler if any important instructions or periodic reports are to be forwarded to him.

The secretary may pack for the traveler a special folder containing such office supplies as blank letterhead paper, plain paper, notebooks, pencils, etc., if there will be occasion to use them.

Care of Office Equipment

Secretaries are not usually mechanics, and they are not expected to repair their own typewriters. They are, however, supposed to clean and oil them in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions. The ability of the secretary to turn out good work depends on her remembering to change the ribbon of her machine and to clean its type whenever necessary. The care of office equipment involves covering typewriters, adding machines, etc., at the end of the working day, and dusting desks and office equipment at regular intervals. The interior portions of typewriters may be dusted effectively with a narrow, long-handled brush.

The secretary is often, among other things, her employer's business housekeeper. In many offices the appearance of his desk is as much her responsibility as is the taking of his dictation. However, she should never rearrange his desk without determining whether that is agreeable to him.

Ordering Supplies

It may be part of the secretary's duties to order minor office supplies from an outside dealer. These usually include: paper bearing the firm's letterhead; blank sheets of the same size, color, and quality, for the pages of letters following the first; carbon paper; second sheets for carbon copies; envelopes, both blank and with the firm's name and address; stamps; postcards; stenographic notebooks; memorandum pads; index cards; file folders; labels; tabs; bank deposit slips; pencils; pens; erasers for pencil, ink, and typewriter; clips; staples; pins; typewriter ribbons; oil for typewriter; paste; transparent mending tape; etc.

The secretary may also have the responsibility of holding the petty cash box and keeping the petty cash account. In a large office she is more often required to requisition supplies from another department of the organization. In either case, it is her business to see that the quantities on hand are always adequate. Supplies should never be ordered in such quantities, however, that they deteriorate before use. Most typewriter ribbons rot, and certain kinds of white paper turn yellow with age. These items in particular should not be ordered unless there is reasonable certainty of their being used within a fairly short time. The secretary should keep a list of all supplies being used and note down impending shortages. All supplies should be orderly arranged in the proper cabinets.

Bank Accounts

The handling of a bank account involves three chief operations: (1) making deposits; (2) writing checks and paying bills; (3) checking bank statements.

The bank book should always be taken to the bank when a deposit is to be made. If for some reason it is necessary to leave the bank book in the office, a duplicate deposit slip should be made out by the secretary and initialed by the teller. This slip should be preserved by the secretary until it is possible to have the deposit entered in the bank book. All deposits should be entered in the stub of the check book so that the officials of the company may always be able to ascertain the exact bank balance.

One method of endorsing checks should be adopted and maintained. This is the rule in almost all business offices.

When possible, bills should be paid by check. When this is impossible, a receipt should be obtained for the cash disbursed. All offices have a procedure of verifying bills before paying them. These procedures always embrace verification of quantity, quality, and specifications; the checking of credit allowances and discounts; and the checking of the arithmetic of the bill.

When, on or shortly after the first of the month, the canceled checks for the previous month are returned, the secretary should go over them carefully. The checking of a bank statement involves these processes:

(1) The checks as returned should be checked against the stubs in the book. This is an elementary precaution against forgery.

(2) The deposit items on the bank statement should be checked against the deposit items in the bank book. Bank book and bank statement should agree.

(3) The canceled checks should agree with the withdrawal items on the bank statement.

(4) By subtracting the total of the checks from the total of the deposit items, a figure is arrived at which should equal the current bank balance.

(5) Checks issued in one month and not presented until after the first of the following month are always a nuisance to bookkeepers and cashiers. It is perfectly permissible to ask that checks outstanding for a long time be deposited.

The Large Office

The routine of a large office has certain special characteristics setting it off from that of a small office. As a result of the difference in size, the number of tasks are multiplied. The proper carrying out of such a complex routine is far beyond the powers of one secretary of general ability, or even several. Specialization is essential, each employee concentrating on a few steps in a highly complicated process. Even the work of the private secretary is usually limited to that entailed in serving one executive or a small group in a specialized field.

This specialization, though inescapable, brings up certain difficulties seldom found in small offices. Greater dependence must be placed on a carefully-thought-out and fool-proof routine. It becomes impossible for one person to oversee and coordinate everything. Yet the specialized office worker performing only one task has difficulty in understanding the function of his work and seeing it in the proper perspective, and when tasks are performed by many individuals instead of one or two, there is a correspondingly greater chance for misunderstanding, error, and confusion.

To offset this disadvantage, many large offices make a practice of shifting workers from one task to another, so that they will gain a greater understanding of the whole routine and be better able to detect errors. Some workers resent being assigned to new tasks, disliking the added mental effort involved and thinking it merely a matter of whim. Actually they should welcome such opportunities and look upon them as training for promotion. This is even more true when individuals are shifted from department to department, spending a certain amount of time in production work, advertising, merchandising, sales work, and distribution. Such varied training is a frequent preliminary to advancement. The wider your knowledge, the better are your chances for promotion.

It must always be remembered that the large modern office should be an adjusting mechanism between the other departments, which have a less flexible sort of work and must struggle with external factors—the production department with machines and materials, the distribution department with transportation facilities, the sales department with general business conditions and consumers' demands. Unfortunately some office administrations consider that their job is to exercise authority and direct the activities of all other departments. This mistaken authoritarianism is largely an inheritance from the days of smaller businesses, when one or a few individuals personally supervised all activities. The efficient modern office administration coordinates activities, smooths out difficulties, avoids inter-departmental difficulties, and in all ways acts as an adjusting mechanism. Therefore the more flexible the individual worker is and the better he is acquainted with other jobs besides his own, the better he will be able to serve his employer and himself.

The proficient office worker should know how to make use of the facilities of the United States mails intelligently and economically. The sources of postal loss should be understood, in order that they may be avoided. A good working knowledge of the classification and rates of postage is essential.

Through its thousands of postoffices and rural routes it is estimated that the U.S. Postal Department handles billions of pieces of mail every year. With this immense volume of business it is hardly necessary to point out that losses do occur. Valuable letters and parcels disappear, and occasional delays cause inconvenience and damage. By far the greatest loss occurs as a direct result of carelessness and ignorance on the part of the users of the mails.

Hundreds of millions of letters are mailed every year that require special examination and re-addressing by postoffice clerks before they can be delivered. The Dead Letter Office receives many tens of millions of letters every year. It is impossible to compute the annual indirect loss occasioned by wrongly addressed parcels and letters, and resulting in misunderstandings in business and money matters, failure to complete deals or keep appointments.

It is estimated by the federal Post Office Department that hundreds of thousands of letters bearing no address whatsoever are received every year in the Division of Dead Letters and its several branches. This represents an actual waste of thousands of dollars in postage stamps alone, not to mention the value of their contents. It does not include the carloads of letters and parcels which never reach their destination because of insufficient or incorrect addressing.

The total of postage stamps found loose in the mails would amount to hundreds of thousands yearly. Carelessness in affixing the stamps is responsible for most of this loss. By reason of insecure wrapping hundreds of thousands of articles of merchandise are found loose in the mails every year, and sent to the postoffices at the respective division headquarters of the Railway Mail Service. These articles include everything from jewelry to tires.

The Dead Letter Office returns what it can, but the carelessness which misdirects letters is likely to record no return address, with the result that millions of letters are destroyed and thousands of dollars worth of property is sold at auction.

To avoid losses of this kind it is well to keep in mind the following suggestions:

- a) Always write "Transient" or "General Delivery" on mail matter for persons not permanently located in the city addressed.

- b) Be sure that name and address is given in full with street and number, postoffice box, or R.F.D. address.
- c) Owing to the fact that in some states there is more than one town of the same or nearly the same name, it is sometimes advisable to give the county.
- d) Do not abbreviate the names of states. "Mo." and "Me." "N.Y." and "N.J." or "La." and "Ga." are often confused if carelessly written.
- e) It is essential that mail be properly prepared for mailing. See that letters are properly sealed and parcels securely wrapped.

Ignorance of postal regulations can result in many other types of loss. Sometimes, for example, an extensive advertising campaign is launched involving the expenditure of thousands of dollars, only to be held up as violating some one of the numerous postal regulations. Occasionally an advertising agency will overlook the postal requirements when preparing circulars and other matter for mailing, with the result that a higher rate of postage must be paid than was originally intended. Postal authorities report that millions of letters and parcels pass through their hands every year which could just as well go in another class at a lower rate.

First Class

To this class of domestic mail belongs all matter wholly or partly in writing, whether handwritten or typewritten, sealed or unsealed. Matter containing any writing whatsoever (except the sender's card enclosed in a parcel) must be sent at the first-class rate. Also mail sealed against inspection belongs to the first class unless printed labels giving permission for inspection and nature of contents are attached.

Second Class

This class includes newspapers and periodicals.

Third Class

Circulars, photographs, books (i.e., trade or commercial literature) and catalogues, other printed matter (except newspapers and periodicals, which are second class) and merchandise belong to this class. Third class is limited to unsealed matter weighing less than 16 ounces.

SPECIAL RATE FOR BOOKS. A special rate is applicable to books for general circulation (literature). This classification does not include advertising literature in book form or books furthering the commercial interests of a particular group, as banking reports, trade annuals, etc. The package must bear the word "Book" or "Books."

Fourth Class, or Parcel Post

Merchandise, printed matter, and all other matter not embraced in the first and second classes may be sent via parcel post.

The Limit of Weight for parcel post is 70 pounds.

The Limit of Size is 100 inches in length and girth combined. The length is determined by measuring the greatest distance in a straight line between the ends (but not around the parcel), while its girth is the distance around the parcel at its thickest part.

Special Delivery

To insure prompt handling of mail and a delivery earlier than that provided by the usual carrier, mail should be sent special delivery. Such mail will be delivered by special messenger if it is received at the post office of destination between 7 a.m. and 9 p.m.; if it is received before 6 p.m. Sunday, it will be delivered on Sunday.

If money or other valuables are sent by special delivery, they should be insured, or better, registered.

Special Handling

Parcel-post packages requiring special handling, such as those containing eggs, day-old chicks, etc., will receive the speediest handling and transportation practicable on payment of a special fee. The special-handling charge does not include special delivery.

Registered Mail

First, second, and third-class matter (and parcel-post, if sealed and mailed at the first-class rate) may be registered by paying a fee in addition to the regular postage. Mail which should be registered rather than insured:

- 1) Money, if checks or money orders are not available.
- 2) Valuable papers.

3) Articles of unusual value.

4) Articles for which a return receipt is desired, showing delivery.

5) Letters which are to be delivered to addressee in person.

Indemnity up to $1000 may be obtained.

Receipts for registered mail should be retained until the sender is certain that the mail has been received. If the matter is not delivered within a reasonable time, a request should be made at the post office to trace it.

Insurance

Third and fourth-class mail may be insured against loss or damage by payment of a fee in addition to the regular postage. First and second-class matter, with some exceptions, cannot be insured, but must be registered.

C.O.D.

Mail may be sent C.O.D. in order to make collection on an article through the Post Office Department. This applies to sealed as well as to unsealed third and fourth-class mail. On a single C.O.D. package not more than $200 may be collected. The fee on C.O.D. mail includes insurance or registration (depending upon the class).

Money Orders

Money should not be transmitted by mail. To prevent loss or theft, money orders, issued in amounts up to $100, should be used. Receipts for money orders should be kept until the money orders have been cashed.

Air Mail Service

Any matter which is accepted in the ordinary mail may be sent via air mail if it is not subject to damage by freezing. Matter sent by air must be marked "AIR MAIL" and may be deposited in any mail box. Ordinary postage stamps may be used, although special air mail stamps are issued by the government.

On air mail the limit of weight is 70 pounds and the limit of size, 100 inches in length and girth combined.

The fees for registration, insurance, special delivery, and C.O.D. are the same as for regular mail.

TABLE OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

Avoirdupois Weight

(Used in the United States, Great Britain and other English-speaking countries for weighing goods other than such small items as drugs, rare metals, precious stones, etc.)

16 drams = 1 ounce (oz.)

16 ounces, or 7,000 grains = 1 pound (lb.)

25 pounds (in U. S.) = 1 quarter (qr.)

28 pounds (in Great Britain) = 1 quarter

4 quarters of 25 pounds = 1 short, or U. S., hundredweight (cwt.)

- 4 quarters of 28 pounds = 1 long, or British, hundredweight (cwt.)
 20 short hundredweights (2,000 pounds) = 1 short ton
 20 long hundredweights (2,240 pounds) = 1 long ton

Linear Measure

- 12 lines = 1 inch (in.)
 12 inches = 1 foot (ft.)
 3 feet = 1 yard (yd.)
 $5\frac{1}{2}$ yards or $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet = 1 rod (rd.)
 40 rods = 1 furlong (fur.)
 8 furlongs, or 5,280 feet = 1 land or statute mile

Square Measure

- 144 square inches (sq. in.) = 1 square foot (sq. ft.)
 9 square feet = 1 square yard (sq. yd.)
 $30\frac{1}{4}$ square yards, or $272\frac{1}{4}$ square feet = 1 square rod (sq. rd.)
 160 square rods, or 43,560 square feet = 1 acre (a.)
 640 acres = 1 square mile (sq. mi.)

In the United States, a square mile of public land is known legally as a section. Thirty-six sections, when arranged in a square 6 miles by 6 miles, form a township. In some states and counties the township is an administrative or taxing division.

Cubic Measure

- 1,728 cubic inches (cu. in.) = 1 cubic foot (cu. ft.)
 27 cubic feet = 1 cubic yard (cu. yd.)

Liquid Measure

- 4 gills (gi.) = 1 pint (pt.)
 2 pints = 1 quart (qt.)
 4 quarts = 1 gallon (gal.)
 $31\frac{1}{2}$ gallons = 1 barrel (bbl.)
 2 barrels = 1 hogshead (hhd.)

The U. S. gallon is equal to .833 imperial gallon, or British gallon.

Dry Measure

- 2 pints (pt.) = 1 quart (qt.)
 4 quarts = 1 gallon (gal.)
 2 gallons or 8 quarts = 1 peck (pk.)
 4 pecks = 1 bushel (bu.)
 8 bushels = 1 quarter (qr.)

The Metric System

The metric system was developed in France, but it is now used everywhere for scientific purposes. It is the prevailing commercial system in most of the countries of continental Europe and has been officially adopted in Latin America. The basic units of the system are the gram, a measure of weight, the meter, a measure of distance, and the liter, a measure of volume. By combining these basic units with the following prefixes, fractional and multiple units are obtained, as milligram, centigram, decigram, etc.

- milli- = one thousandth (.001)
 centi- = one hundredth (.01) deci- = one tenth (.1)
 deca- = ten hecto- = one hundred kilo- = one thousand myria- = ten thousand

Weight

The gram is the fundamental unit of weight, and is defined as one one-thousandth of the weight of a certain platinum-iridium bar kept at the International Bureau of Weights and Measures at Sèvres.

- 10 milligrams (mg.) = 1 centigram (cg.)
 10 centigrams = 1 decigram (dg.)
 10 decigrams = 1 gram (gr.)
 10 grams = 1 decagram (dgc.)
 10 decagrams = 1 hectogram (hg.)
 10 hectograms = 1 kilogram (kg.)
 10 kilograms = 1 myriagram (myg.)
 10 myriagrams = 1 quintal (q.)
 10 quintals = 1 metric ton (1,000,000 grams)

Linear Measure

- 10 millimeters (mm.) = 1 centimeter (cm.)
 10 centimeters (cm.) = 1 decimeter (dm.)
 10 decimeters = 1 meter (m.)
 10 meters = 1 decameter (dcm.)
 10 decameters = 1 hectometer (hm.)
 10 hectometers = 1 kilometer (km.)
 10 kilometers = 1 myriameter (10,000 meters)

Area or Surface Measure

- 100 square millimeters (mm², or sq. mm.) = 1 square centimeter (cm², or sq. cm.)
 100 square centimeters = 1 square decimeter (dm², or sq. dm.)
 100 square decimeters = 1 square meter (sq. m., or m²)
 100 square meters = 1 square decameter (dcm², or sq. dcm.)
 100 square decameters = 1 square hectometer (hm², or sq. hm.), or hectare
 100 hectares = 1 square kilometer (km², or sq. km.), or myriare
 100 square kilometers = 1 square myriameter (sq. mym., or mym²)

Volume or Liquid Measure

- 1,000 cubic millimeters (mm^3 , or cu. mm.) =
1 cubic centimeter (cm^3 , or cu. cm.)
1,000 cubic centimeters = 1 cubic decimeter
(dm^3 , or cu. dm.)
1,000 cubic decimeters = 1 cubic meter (m^3 , or cu. m.), or 1 stere
1,000 cubic meters = 1 cubic decameter
(dcm^3 , or cu. dcm.)
1,000 cubic decameters = 1 cubic hectometer
(hm^3 , or cu. hm.)
1,000 cubic hectometers = 1 cubic kilometer
(km^3 , or cu. km.)
1,000 cubic kilometers = 1 cubic myriameter
(mym^3 , or cu. mym.)

Capacity Measure

- 10 milliliters (ml.) = 1 centiliter (cl.)
10 centiliters = 1 deciliter (dl.)
10 deciliters = 1 liter (l.)
10 liters = 1 decaliter (dcl.)
10 decaliters = 1 hectoliter (hl.)
10 hectoliters = 1 kiloliter (kl.)
10 kiloliters = 1 myrialiter (myl.)

Equivalents

- 1 meter = 39.37 inches
1 kilometer = 3,280.83 feet, or .62137 mile
1 cubic centimeter = .06102 cubic inch
1 liter = 1.0567 U. S. liquid quarts, or .908
U. S. dry quart
1 gram = 15.432 grains
1 decagram = .3527 ounce avoirdupois
1 kilogram = 2.2046 pounds avoirdupois
907.18 kilograms = 1 short ton
1,016.05 kilograms = 1 long ton
1 foot = 30.48 centimeters; 1 surveyors' chain = 20.117 meters; 1 engineers' chain = 30.48 meters.
1 square foot = 929.03 square centimeters;
1 acre = 4,046.87 square meters; 1 square mile = 2.59 square kilometers.

Apothecaries' Weight

(Used in weighing drugs and medicines.)

- 20 grains (gr.) = 1 scruple (♃)
3 scruples = 1 dram (℥)
8 drams = 1 ounce (℥)
12 ounces, or 5,760 grains = 1 pound (lb.)

Apothecaries' Liquid Measure

- (Used in the United States in measuring liquid drugs and medicines.)
60 minims (m.) = 1 fluid dram (f℥)
8 fluid drams = 1 fluid ounce (f℥)
16 fluid ounces = 1 pint (O.)
8 pints = 1 gallon (Cong. or C.)

Angular Measure

- (Used in measuring distances on the circumference of a circle or sphere.)
60 seconds (") = 1 minute (')
60 minutes = 1 degree (°)
90 degrees = 1 quadrant, or right angle
360 degrees = 1 circumference

Land Measure

- 9 square feet (sq. ft.) = 1 square yard (sq. yd.)
30¼ square yards, or 272¼ square feet = 1 square rod (sq. rd.)
40 square rods = 1 rood (r.)
4 roods, or 160 square rods = 1 acre (a.)
640 acres = 1 square mile (sq. mi.)

Surveyors' Measure

- 7.92 inches = 1 link (li.)
100 links, or 66 feet = 1 surveyor's or Gunter's chain
80 chains = 1 mile
or
12 inches = 1 link (li.)
100 links (or feet) = 1 engineers' or Ramsden's chain

Nautical Measure

- (Used in measuring distances and depths at sea.)
6 feet = 1 fathom
100 fathoms, or 120 fathoms = 1 cable-length
1,000 fathoms = 1 nautical mile

The length given above for the nautical mile is commonly used, but it is not the official length. In the United States the nautical mile is officially 6,080.27 feet, or one minute of a great circle on the earth. In Great Britain the nautical mile is officially 6,080 feet.

ETIQUETTE FOR BUSINESS MEN AND WOMENStreamlined Courtesy

Business etiquette is courtesy adjusted to meet requirements of speed and efficiency.
That is what distinguishes it from general social etiquette, which is largely an etiquette of leisure. At parties and other friendly gatherings there is sufficient time for the exchange of pleasant formalities and other indications of mutual affability. But in the world of business, such courtesies are trimmed down to a convenient minimum.

Downright incivility and lack of consideration are no more excusable in the office than at home or in public. The plea of "business" does not justify rudeness or offensive impersonality of behavior. Courtesy unembroidered is courtesy nevertheless. And an office in which an atmosphere of friendliness and mutual consideration prevails is far preferable to the frigid temple of unadulterated "efficiency" in which both employers and employees are lifeless robots.

On the other hand it must be remembered that during office hours business men and women are workers. Unlike persons attending a social function, their time is not their own. This fundamental fact determines the nature of business etiquette.

Salutations

Elaborate greetings are obviously inappropriate for fellow workers who meet every day. A simple "Good morning" is sufficient, and even this is often dispensed with after work has begun. If the meeting takes place on the way to work a more informal and extended greeting is common. The same general rule holds good for closing time. For example, if employees chance to leave the office at the same moment, they will exchange "Good nights," but it is neither necessary nor advisable for each worker to take formal leave of every other worker. Repeated greetings become meaningless and develop an artificial and hollow sound. Fellow workers take their daily meetings for granted.

An accurate knowledge and use of the names of individuals, however, is essential in the business world. A business man should know the names of all staff members with whom he is apt to come in contact. This is partly a matter of courtesy; every person likes the sound of his own name. But it also makes for efficiency by preventing hesitation and confusion.

In the matter of names a certain formality is frequently desirable and may be absolutely required in some concerns. Individuals who call each other by the first name outside working hours, frequently find it advisable to address each other by their last names while at work, especially if they are of the opposite sex. There is of course a great deal of variation in this practice from office to office, but it must be remembered that co-workers are meeting as employees and not as friends. Outside the office the reverse holds true. The fact that two people are employed by the same firm is no reason for added formality when they meet at a social gathering. Friendships between superiors and subordinates, it is true, may give rise to special problems. The transition from friendly sociability to polite impersonality is not an easy one, and rules of etiquette provide no ready-made solutions to problems of personal relations. They must be solved by the individuals involved.

Greetings addressed to superiors by subordinates require greater formality. In many concerns they are omitted altogether, particularly if the difference in status is considerable. Much depends on the attitude of the superior, who is in the best position to take the initiative. The employee must be guided by his behavior. It is assumed that the executive's time is especially valuable, and therefore greetings and remarks ought not to be addressed to him if he seems at all preoccupied. There is no hard and fast rule. A company president who invariably says "Good morning" to the elevator operator may be quite startled to hear himself similarly addressed by one of his clerks. The good executive, however, shows a more general affability and solicitude; he tries to avoid being curt, crusty, or "formidable," knowing that his position is no excuse for rudeness.

Working Together

Any person attempting to concentrate on a job has a right to expect that he will not be interrupted unnecessarily. Therefore those who work in an office should think twice before breaking in on the thoughts of their desk-mates. Interruptions are particularly taboo if it is obvious that the person is performing a complicated task or thinking out a difficult problem. In such cases the interruption, even though necessary, should be delayed if possible until the person comes to a natural stopping point. Similarly, one should knock before entering a private office.

The same rule holds when two persons are talking and the third approaches them to make a request or deliver some special instructions. Naturally too much hesitation is as bad as too little, since it is apt to slow up important matters. The business man or woman should cultivate a nice discrimination in approaching fellow workers who are occupied. In giving or transmitting orders, brevity and directness are advisable. The employee, unless he is a temperamental specialist, is not a stranger who must be artfully persuaded to do the tasks assigned him. The capable employer, it is true, knows how to phrase orders pleasantly, but he does not temporize. Requests, such as those made between departments or individuals of equal status, are a different matter and require a more tactful approach; here the elements of cooperation and mutual consideration should be stressed.

Most concerns discourage conversation on personal matters and many forbid it outright. The overly talkative worker makes it difficult for others to concentrate on their work. In some businesses a great deal of conversation is necessary, but it should be conducted in such a way as not to disturb any third person.

This also applies to telephone conversations. Some people unconsciously develop an unnaturally loud and strained telephone-voice. Nervous mannerisms, mumblings, and fidgetings are also very distracting. To counteract them, habits of poise and grace should be cultivated.

It is customary to introduce a newcomer to all those with whom he or she will come in contact, thus facilitating future cooperation and helping create a friendly atmosphere. Such introductions may take the form: "Mr. Jameson—Mr. Edwards, the production manager. Mr. Jameson is going to work with us in the advertising department." Introductions aid in orienting the new employee, provided they are not so numerous as to be confusing.

The new employee should usually let others take the initiative in establishing further acquaintance. He should not attempt to press too quickly into the circles of office friendship. However, he should not be overly retiring. Aggressiveness and straightforwardness are at a premium in modern business.

In many offices collections are taken up to buy presents for departing employees, etc. Such collections should not be made obligatory, and should be limited to individuals acquainted with the employee for whom the present is intended. Good judgment and discretion are necessary in handling the matter. Some firms forbid the practice.

The Visitor in the Office

Any commercial or industrial enterprise depends for its success on the attitude of the public and of other business concerns. Representatives of those two social groups are therefore treated with consideration and tact. The trained receptionist is direct without being brusque, cordial but not effusive. She greets the visitor with a "Good morning" or "Good afternoon," as the case may be, and then waits for him to state his name and occupation. She is especially careful to discover whether or not he has an appointment. If the information is not volunteered, she politely requests it. Then she promptly transmits this information to the proper person. If it is necessary for the visitor to wait, she invites him to be seated and shows solicitude for his comfort and convenience. Hers is the responsibility for seeing that the firm creates a good impression. She must also prevent pointless interviews and wasted time. Her manner toward the visitor should create a dual impression: first, that she understands his point of view and will do her best to expedite his business; second, that her firm is efficient in its methods and that the time of her superiors is valuable. She is quick to size up visitors, as that may help her employers decide whether or not to grant an interview, but she is extremely cautious about judging visitors herself merely by their appearance; she knows that important people do not always look or act important.

The receptionist must also have a good working knowledge of the organization of her firm, in order to direct visitors to the proper official or department. She makes it her business to learn the names of visitors, particularly those who come frequently; such knowledge increases her efficiency and adds an intimate charm to her greeting. She is careful to shield higher executives from inquiries or requests that could be appropriately handled by subordinates. Finally, if the visitor cannot be granted an interview, she does her best to lighten his disappointment and send him away in a good humor. She should be careful, however, in promising future interviews or putting people off with vaguely hopeful suggestions. Sometimes this may be required, but in the long run such temporizing will tend to make both her and her firm unpopular. Frankness and sincerity pay in dealing with the outsider.

A visitor, on the other hand, should cooperate by being precise in stating his business. It sometimes saves time to send in a business card, with or without a written message.

A different type of visitor is the personal friend of the employer or employee. Such a person must be treated with similar cordiality and directness by the receptionist. Business men and women, however, should not encourage their friends and relatives to visit them during working hours, as such meetings frequently cause embarrassing interruptions.

Appointments and Interviews

Punctuality is essential in the business world. There is no such thing as being "fashionably late." The business man plans his day with strict regard for economy of time and efficiency. An appointment broken or delayed often results in the upsetting of important plans. If an appointment must be broken, notification should be given at the earliest possible moment. Such notification should be accompanied by an explanation and statement of regrets.

The person granting interviews, on the other hand, should attempt to fulfill them punctually. If the business man is wise, he will not use his importance as an excuse for keeping visitors waiting. A crowded reception room may add to his prestige in a superficial way, but it may also be interpreted as a sign of inefficiency and rudeness. Naturally, the person who seeks an interview without previous appointment must expect to wait.

The handling of an interview depends to a considerable degree on the business man's personal judgment. It is up to him to decide whether to be brief and terse, or engaging and conversational. In either case, a few pleasant remarks take little time and put the visitor at ease.

The person seeking an interview, such as a salesman, will respect the value of the business man's time, if he hopes to create a good impression. He will also select a convenient hour for making his calls, and avoid visiting people when he knows they are at their busiest.

A clear conversational voice is important in interviews, and even more important in telephone conversations. Good enunciation and a well-modulated tone are not only essential to accurate understanding, but also constitute a courteous compliment to the listener. Slurring of words is especially to be avoided, since facial expression and gesture cannot help out. The secretary and switchboard operator should strive not to develop a sing-song intonation.

Personal Appearance

The attire of the business man should be simple and neat, though usually not too conservative or sober. A dark suit, white shirt, and "quiet" necktie are always appropriate. Considerable depends on the nature of the firm. Some companies prefer to create a slightly old-fashioned, conservative, and "reliable" impression. Others find it helpful to cultivate an air of being very fashionable and up-to-date. The newcomer should guide himself by observation, remembering that, whatever his position, he is in a sense a representative of his firm. Observation will also determine matters of behavior. In some offices, for example, men may remove their coats and vests. In others this is never done, and a thin suit-coat of dark material may be desirable. Smoking is prohibited in some offices. Even when permitted, it is wise for the subordinate employee not to indulge unless he is absolutely sure he will not offend some superior with strict ideas about smoking. In matters such as this the junior clerk should not guide himself by the behavior of the privileged executive.

While the clothes of the business woman should not be clinging, bright-hued party dresses, she should also avoid excessive severity and mannishness. Any simple dress which avoids such extremes is appropriate. Some business women frequently wear spectator-sports costumes or gracefully tailored suits with effect, but good taste does not depend on expensiveness; costly dresses are inappropriate in the office. White collars and cuffs generally create a favorable impression. Well-groomed hair is essential and a judicious use of make-up always advisable. A pretty and charming woman, neatly dressed, is an asset to any office.

The Woman in Business

No longer are a large number of employments closed to the woman. Indeed, many occupations and types of position have become her special province. Her place in the world of commerce and industry is established. Just as she need no longer imitate the severity of men's clothing, so she need not attempt to pattern herself after the business man in other ways. Within the limits of business practice she is free to express her femininity and follow the bent of her personality.

A married woman may use her maiden name in business if she considers that desirable. Or she may use her married name; as Jean Arlan Kennedy; or her married title; as, Mrs. Ralph Kennedy. If a widow, she generally retains her married title. If a divorcee, she may use her husband's surname; as, Jean Kennedy; or her maiden name; Jean Arlan. She may not use her married title. In either case she may prefix Miss or Mrs. to her name. Only a married woman, using her married title, regularly prefixes Mrs. to her name. If Mrs. is used in other cases, it should be enclosed in parentheses; as (Mrs.) Jean Kennedy. The same rule holds good for Miss; as (Miss) Jean Arlan.

The ambitious business woman wants to be treated as a worker, and not as someone requiring special assistance and personal concessions. The courtesy granted her should be sufficient to satisfy the respect accorded her sex, but not so much as to emphasize and underline her femininity. Elaborate drawing-room manners are out of place in business.

Men are not expected to remove their hats when a woman enters the elevator, or see to it that she is always allowed to enter and leave the car first. Such courtesies would make for considerable delays, particularly in the morning and at closing time, when the elevator is apt to be very crowded. In a crowded elevator, too, there is hardly room for a man to hold his hat conveniently at his side. When the car is not crowded, women are generally allowed to precede, though here again an executive or someone who is hurrying for a legitimate reason may go first. The same holds true in the matter of passing through doors, though all individuals are expected to hold the door open for those following. Similarly, a man seated in an office is not expected to rise when a woman speaks to him.

Business in Public

Business is not limited to the office or to office hours. It is also transacted at lunches and dinners, in clubs and locker rooms; it is greatly affected by contacts made at various social gatherings. The advice "Don't mix business with pleasure" is, fortunately or unfortunately, only half true. It would be nearer the truth to say, "If you do mix business with pleasure, be sure the mixture is a pleasant one, and agreeable to the person to whom it is offered." The average business man doesn't put his work out of his mind the minute he leaves the office, any more than the author forgets the book he is writing or the scientist the experiment he is conducting. No matter how frequently shop talk is decried, most people like to talk it. The man who refuses to consider business at social gatherings may be setting himself unnecessary obstacles.

But it must always be remembered that business topics do not take precedence at friendly meetings, as they do at the office. Courtesy requires that they be introduced naturally into conversation, and that mention of them cease if they seem uninteresting to individuals present. This is an important point. The salesman who takes a customer to lunch and then uses the opportunity to bombard him with an interminable salestalk, shows rudeness and very often spoils his own chances as well. The same is true of the executive who lectures on efficiency at a company dinner or gives orders to an employee he meets on a holiday. At social gatherings business conversation cannot be conducted in an abrupt, cut-and-dried manner. It must be pleasantly colored with wit and anecdote, dressed in party clothes, made vivid and interesting. The experienced business man or woman understands the proper technique. A casual word or two, an amusing story, mention of a new idea, a stimulating suggestion, a serious conversation only if the listener is obviously receptive—that's how it's done.

In short, business outside office hours must be conducted according to the rules of general social etiquette.

The salesclerk is in a special position, having to deal with the public constantly and still adhere to a business routine. The customer often behaves with a brusqueness and lack of consideration to which the clerk cannot safely reply in kind. According to modern sales methods, the guiding principle "The customer is always right" must generally be followed, whether the customer is courteous or not.

Flexibility

There are two chief ideas behind the concept of etiquette: mutual consideration, and respect for custom. This is as true for business etiquette as for any other. Some customs are almost universal; others differ from place to place. A department store is very different from a broker's office, and behavior suitable for a newspaper office is out of place in a bank. The business man or woman must follow the maxim "When in Rome, do as the Romans do"—only being very sure not to "outdo the Romans," that is, to show so much facile enthusiasm and over-ready complaisance as to lose dignity and character. Mutual consideration is impossible, however, without mutual understanding. In order to please a person and avoid offending him, one must know his likes and dislikes, his behavior patterns. And no two persons are alike.

This does not mean that a great deal of business etiquette cannot be applied at all times and places. There are certain standards of behavior which almost all civilized business men are expected to live up to. It does mean, however, that etiquette divorced from human understanding is a cold and lifeless routine. If it is to become a warm reality, distinguishing its possessor, it must be tempered with fine tact and breadth of sympathy. It is in this respect that flexibility of behavior in meeting new situations and individuals is essential.

THE SUCCESSFUL SECRETARY

The Secretarial Position

The secretary acts as a personal representative, responsible for the accurate conveying of information to her employer and the accurate issuing of his communications and instructions. The activities of the secretary may vary greatly from employer to employer, sometimes involving only intelligent execution of instructions and in other instances demanding considerable initiative and judgment. But the elements of tact and mediation are always apparent. This is inevitable in the modern world, where the interrelationships between business and public, and between business and business are constantly developing new ramifications. In present-day society the secretary plays an important role, and upon her efficiency depends much of the smooth functioning of the executive.

This does not imply that the secretary has superseded the executive, notwithstanding fictional or actual instances to the contrary. Most employers consider themselves competent to do their own thinking, and often resent any but the most subtly phrased of unsolicited or solicited suggestions, although they are quick to appreciate all assistance which lightens their tasks without challenging their authority. Secretaries who think for their employers, functioning as a kind of master mind behind a screen, are largely a product of twentieth-century fiction. The competent executive's appetite for argument and advice is usually well satisfied by conference with his colleagues and clients.

One of the most important qualifications of a proficient secretary is accuracy. It insures the employer against having to check and re-check small items in search of possible errors. It gives him a comfortable feeling of security. Having someone he can trust, he need not clog his mind with detail.

Accuracy is more a matter of self-discipline than education. A person widely read and highly educated may frequently be guilty of inaccuracies in his thinking and in the verbal or written expression of his thoughts, particularly if he makes a point of glibly rattling off answers to all questions in order to create an impression of brilliance and encyclopedic knowledge. The really accurate individual makes a very clear distinction between facts of which he is certain and notions about which he is vague or doubtful. He has schooled himself to trust and employ the former, and not to waste time trying to puzzle out the latter, especially when consultation of some recognized authority would quickly resolve his doubts.

A relatively small amount of information, organized with clarity and logic, is more valuable than a vast mass of opinions, suppositions, half-remembered rules and procedures, and other loose ends of education. The comparison is the same as that between a relatively small but well-trained body of soldiers and a huge army whose individual fighting men are poorly equipped, unorganized, and badly instructed. The first, if vigorously and strategically employed, will defeat the second. The accurate mind, for that matter, is like a clearly-drawn military map, in which special attention is given to key points and important objectives. It may also be likened to a carefully arranged index, which makes information available in the shortest possible time.

Accuracy need not and should not, however, involve constant recourse to authorities, whether they be books, persons, or information agencies. Such recourse can become a pernicious habit, subtly undermining the individual's confidence in his every belief and assertion, until the spelling of the simplest word or the recalling of the most familiar telephone number awakens overwhelming doubts. The competent secretary does not let such unreasonable worries get the upper hand. She not only knows, but she knows that she knows. Moreover, in consulting authorities, she seeks not only to find an answer for the immediate problem, but also, time permitting, to imprint on her own mind the information so gained, provided it seems apt to be useful a second time and is of such a nature as to be readily learned. Such intelligent use of authorities is in itself an education, rapidly building up a skeleton framework of key facts, into which further information can easily be inserted. Knowledge, if so organized, begets knowledge, since interrelated facts provide clues to each other, and are much more easily recalled than isolated facts.

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance for the secretary of such a skeleton framework, including such fields as spelling, grammar, and usage, frequently-used addresses and telephone numbers, recognized form of letters, proper methods of indexing and filing, regulations on mailing and expressing, the names and faces of individuals and their personality, occupation, and degree of importance, office procedure both general and specific, arrangement of interviews and appointments, and the like. The executive, specialist, or scholar can and very often should forget matters of detail in order to devote his mind more completely and effectively to larger issues. Indeed, it is for this very reason that he employs a secretary. He desires to be left with as free a hand as possible, depending on his secretary to handle all minor matters with intelligence, decision, and discretion. This division of labor, when properly carried out by both parties, is a very effective one.

The secretary should never, except when absolutely unavoidable, question the employer on matters of detail. Such questioning amounts to a confession that she doesn't know her job, and is especially irritating to him because it forces him to cudgel his brains over the very problems of which he wishes to be relieved.

In matters of knowledge and accuracy the requirements of the stenographer are similar to those of the secretary, save that the activities of the former are necessarily limited to a narrower field. Shorthand and typing are usually the sole occupations of the stenographer. To the secretary they are an alphabet, a language which she is able to employ with great facility in the accomplishment of her wider and more varied duties.

The duties of the secretary are not only more complicated and numerous than those of the stenographer; they involve greater responsibility, flexibility, and a significant personal element. The stenographer works with words; the secretary with people.

In this connection the quality of restraint or unobtrusiveness, though not pre-eminent, is especially characteristic and undeniably important. The successful secretary does not obviously impose her personality on her surroundings, but has a way of shading into the background. She cultivates a soft but distinct voice, a quiet but capable manner. Her style of dressing is pleasing to the eye but usually simple and neat, neither overly feminine nor mannish, and above all, suited to the type of establishment in which she is working. Tact and discretion are habitual to her. She is self-effacing—but never hesitant or shy, for she knows that such tactics are out of place in the office, immediately making her a bother rather than a help. When present at conferences and interviews, she maintains a thoroughly impersonal attitude, which facilitates matters and avoids embarrassment. She manages to do this without seeming in the least bored or aloof.

The nature of the secretarial function puts an unusually great premium on discretion and restraint. Inevitably the secretary comes to know a great many matters concerning the firm and employer for whom she is working, many of them confidential. Her position as a personal representative makes it dangerously easy to pass on private information about her immediate employer to the staff, and about members of the staff to her employer. Both of these activities can easily become unethical, damaging, and serious. The accomplished secretary avoids them; by establishing a reputation for discretion, she gains the cooperation of her colleagues. She also makes it possible for her employer to think, talk, plan, and thrash matters out freely, without feeling a constant need for caution in her presence and a constant fear of possible ridicule being circulated subsequently. She becomes a kind of business confidant. In so doing, she advances her status greatly and is better able to play her proper role, which is that of trusted assistant, leaving her employer free to consider major problems.

Ease and Efficiency

The personal qualities of a successful secretary cannot be dissected out of her personality and each discussed by itself, for actually they are all interdependent. For example, accuracy, knowledge, self-discipline, and confidence go hand in hand; one cannot exist without at least something of the others. In the successful personality all qualities are well integrated.

The same is true of ease and efficiency. It is difficult to do things easily without doing them efficiently, and it is difficult to be truly efficient if nervous and tense. Naturally, a person cannot relax while learning a new job. At such times the mind is constantly active—learning, experimenting, testing, watching itself for errors. Even at such a time too much tenseness represents energy wasted. Once the groundwork of the job is learned, it is possible to devote more time to doing it smoothly. Matters of routine become a habit, and the mind is free for other considerations.

The professional dancer performs with a wonderful display of ease and poise. Each turn and gesture is the epitome of grace. Movements that have taken literally years to learn and which are utterly beyond the powers of untrained muscles, are performed in such an effortless manner that the spectator often feels certain a child could duplicate them. But the dancer's performance is comparatively simple in one sense. She is executing a predetermined routine and seldom need adjust herself suddenly to new circumstances. But in the swift-changing world of business, surprises are the rule. The secretary, whose tasks are usually so multitudinous that her work—like all "woman's work"—is never done, must be ready to meet all kinds of demands on her time. Correspondence to be read, letters to be typed, incoming and outgoing telephone calls, dictation, arranging of appointments and conferences, inquiries and instructions—all may descend upon her at once, as if specially designed to confuse and confound her. Nevertheless, she is expected to handle them all dexterously and without losing her poise.

The efficient secretary is busy but never preoccupied. She shifts smoothly from one job to another; does not hesitate, since she knows which action takes precedence over another. When the telephone rings, she does not desperately attempt to finish several lines of typing before answering it—nor does she necessarily break off nervously in the middle of a word. By rigorous self-discipline she has taught herself to leave a piece of work in the middle and come back to it with a minimum loss of time in hunting for loose ends. If she is called upon to do so many things at once that she begins to forget some of them—and that can happen to the most efficient secretary—she takes care of the most pressing matters first and then turns her attention to the others, asking questions if necessary.

Such efficiency is largely a matter of following a routine, and an effective and time-saving routine comprises two chief elements: efficient habits and the ability to make plans. Habit is what enables an individual to perform a task with a minimum of conscious thought. Any action which is repeated a sufficient number of times becomes a habit: walking is a habit; dancing or typing may become habits. Saying "Good morning" to certain individuals and walking down one side of a street rather than another are matters of habit. But habits are not necessarily efficient. In learning to use the typewriter, for example, the "hunt and peck" system can become just as much a habit as the touch system. A stenographer may learn to consult the dictionary automatically when confronted by an unfamiliar word, but she may also learn to become so dependent on the dictionary as seriously to limit her ability; both are habits. Invariably saying "Hello" when answering the telephone may become a habit, although the word "Hello" is usually a waste of time, since it tells nothing and must be immediately followed by an explanation as to who is saying "Hello." In short, habit alone is not enough. Before allowing any action to become habitual, it is well to ask, "Is it an efficient and smooth-flowing action, performed in the fewest number of moves? Will it be an asset to my personality, or just an unnecessary burden? Is it a short-cut, or the long way around?" Thoughts, too, can become as habitual as actions: the mind develops its stereotyped patterns, which may be either helps or hindrances. In these matters, every person must be his own efficiency expert. Business and secretarial schools, of course, inculcate into the individual a groundwork of efficient habits, but the work does not end there. Every time a new routine is learned or an old routine is changed, careful thought must be devoted to habit-building. Question it thoroughly as to its advantages and disadvantages.

The ability to make plans—the other element of an effective routine—demands clear thinking. Every executive has some way of arranging his day's work and that of his secretary. The first hour of the morning may be devoted to reading and answering correspondence; then interviews may be held with members of the staff, followed by interviews with salesmen and other outsiders, and so on, each task being handled at a definite time. But there is no such thing as a foolproof and unalterable routine. Interruptions of all sorts are always coming up. Pressing matters must be given a special time-allotment or shoved ahead. The day's routine must be rearranged again and again. Much of the responsibility for this falls on the secretary, and particularly such difficult tasks as postponing interviews without hurting feelings, and seeing that essential business is handled by an employer deep in conference. To plan a routine calls only for careful deliberation, but to break a routine and replace it with a new one on the spur of the moment demands ingenuity and quick thinking.

Dealing with People

The good secretary is well liked. Visitors to the office recall her courteous, cheerful manner, her intelligent considerateness, her smile. Fellow employees value her helpful cooperation and the little favors she is able to grant them. As for her employer, he depends on her in a hundred different ways, not only in business dealings but sometimes in social matters as well. It is part of her job to create a good impression, establish and maintain friendly relations. Her corner of the office shows a touch of color, literally as well as figuratively.

The business world moves at high speed and in quick tempo. The office building hums with activity. Executives are drawn together by a complex web of letters, telephone calls, conversations, agreements. Transactions are set underway whose success depends on the swift and efficient functioning of each employee, from the highest to the most subordinate. In this fast-moving world, confusions, misunderstandings, delays, and other manifestations of poor cooperation prove costly. Yet it is all too easy for an individual to develop a hurried, nervous tempo of working, no more efficient than a burst of speed by a high-powered auto in heavy traffic. Obviously, whatever makes for greater smoothness in personal relations and functioning is very important.

The secretary is a vital part of this swift-moving scene; yet her position enables her to obtain a perspective of the entire picture. And since she is largely a mediator, she is in a good position to work for smoothness. She can make it easier for people to cooperate. She can do her bit to keep those with whom she comes in contact in good humor, soften their disappointments, increase their enthusiasm. She can do her best to smooth over difficulties, lessen intra-office jealousies, and avoid gaining the reputation of gossip and office spy.

The good secretary has developed the qualities of ease and efficiency and is therefore able to relax to a certain degree during her work; and by doing this she makes it easier for others to relax. She does not "fight against" her job, wasting time in worry and bitterness, but makes her work a part of her life. She promotes a similarly healthy attitude in others.

To be able to do all this, the secretary must be expert at personal relations. Now a great deal has been written about the art of handling people. Psychologists, authors, homespun philosophers, and "business experts" of varying intelligence and ability have told the world how to make "friends," conciliate enemies, and develop an irresistible personality. Their copious advice can usually be reduced to one central principle: namely, that any human being is somewhat egotistical and likes to feel important. Therefore, he likes the sound of his own name; he likes to be reminded of his success and good points; he likes to be remembered and to feel that people have affection for him; he likes compliments, provided they are not too obviously flattering; he likes to think that his ideas and suggestions receive serious attention, etc. He does not like to remember his failures and failings; he does not like to admit he's wrong or give up an untenable position in argument, unless there is a graceful "out"; he dislikes cleverness in others and fears sarcasm; he is jealous of success; he does not like to be forgotten, etc. All this is, of course, very true, as the secretary who understands anything of human nature is well aware; and she must also know how to make use of her knowledge. However, a human being is more than a self-centered, jealous child, and there is a limit to the use that can be made of methods for handling people which are based largely on flattery, facile enthusiasm, and general heartiness. Sincerity, courtesy, and unforced human interest—natural rather than artificial qualities—are more important.

Another important consideration is that all individuals are different. They do not conform to type—"rich man, poor man, beggarman, thief,"—or some more sophisticated set of categories. Each has his own quirks and idiosyncracies. The methods that work with one will not necessarily work with another.

SUCCESS IN YOUR JOB

There are people who get ahead without pushing and without making a fuss. They do their work smoothly and easily. Obstacles are unable to hold them back for long. Promotion comes to them naturally. They take new responsibilities in stride. It seems as if Fortune were always smiling on them.

Those are the people who know the secret of getting along with their work.

It is possible for a person to fight his job without being aware of the fact. He may think he is putting forth a great deal of effort, more than should be required of him. Actually, he grudges every particle of energy he is forced to expend. Old assignments bore him. New assignments seem like an imposition. He is irritated by his co-workers and superiors. Everything rasps his nerves. As a result, he goes down to business each morning feeling like a man who is about to encounter an old enemy.

Yet there is nothing fundamentally lacking in such a person. Watch him when he is busy with a hobby, or conversing with a friend, or reading a book on some favorite subject, or otherwise amusing himself. At such times he seems a different person. His face lights up. He forgets himself and the fatigue that weighed on him during working hours. Ideas come to him thick and fast. If something happens to interest him especially, he is willing to sit up half the night discussing it or working on it. His mind and body begin to function as they were intended to, as they are always capable of functioning.

No, there is nothing fundamentally lacking in such a person—but there is something vitally wrong in the relationship between him

The good secretary is a student of individual human nature, and learns more than names and faces and occupations. She discovers the things that please and displease the people with whom she comes in contact; she comes to know their strong and weak points. Above all, she studies the personality of her employer with a concentrated interest. His habits in giving dictation; his attitude toward salesmen; his tendencies to hurry through certain matters and linger over others, are all matters of importance to her. She discovers the extent to which he desires her to make changes in the form of his letters, or rearrange materials on his desk. This study is for the most part a silent one, conducted by observation rather than questions, yet it is of vital importance. For it enables the secretary to handle her work in the way her employer would like to see it handled, and by adjusting her personality to his, to serve her employer most satisfactorily.

and his job. It is as if he had built a wall between his job and his true self.

Work, of course, is not the same thing as play. There are many jobs which have disagreeable, arduous, and boring aspects. But—and here is the important thing—all jobs have some interesting aspects. There are friendships with fellow employees and superiors to be cemented and extended. There are opportunities to increase efficiency, make improvements in technique. Finally, if a person looks beyond the seemingly narrow limits of his own special job, a whole new world opens up for him. He begins to learn the work of those around and above him. He increases his knowledge of the business as a whole. He sees his own job as one unit in a mighty chain of productive activity, and because of this broader vision his job acquires a new glamour.

The enterprising and successful individual gets into his job, lets it take hold of him. He does not dote out energy like a miser. He does not isolate himself from his fellow workers. He tackles his work as if it were an exciting game (and it is an exciting game for those who know the secret). He does more than he is told. He gives his interests free rein. Whenever he gets a chance, he satisfies his curiosity about other aspects of the business. He is genuinely loyal for the simple reason that he really likes his work. He can't help working smoothly, since his alert, forward-looking attitude makes it easy for him to forget petty irritations and grievances. He studies his own job in relation to those of others. As a result he is ready, like the understudy of a theatrical star, to step into a bigger part.

When an opportunity for advancement is open, the boss is on the lookout for someone who can competently perform the more responsible job, and he naturally turns to the person in whom he has confidence. The enterprising and forward-looking individual builds himself a reputation for ability, integrity, and dependability. He qualifies himself through study, experience, and application, so that he is prepared to go ahead and fill the better job.

Such a person is truly alive. Beyond all else, he knows the deep satisfaction of using the energy that is in him and, giving freely and eagerly of himself, the rich happiness of effort well spent that makes life worth living.

INTRODUCTION

According to an old adage, the man who attempts to be his own lawyer has a fool for his client. There is, no doubt, a great deal of truth in that statement, and it is not the purpose of this book to enable a man to act as his own lawyer. In order to conduct his business intelligently, however, it is necessary for the layman to understand some of the principles of the laws which govern his rights and duties toward those with whom he deals. Never has this been more true than at present. In the course of his daily living, the average citizen is constantly coming into contact with the law and with legal problems.

It is to meet this need of a practical knowledge of the law on the part of the individual that this section is intended. BUSINESS LAW FOR THE LAYMAN, in convenient dictionary form, contains up-to-date information on practically every branch of the law and covers all recent legislation with reference to bankruptcy, wages and hours, and the relationship of employer to employee. It also includes a complete set of the most commonly used legal forms.

In brief, this section contains an accurate, concise statement of the law, as it affects the average layman and business man, and should prove invaluable as a ready reference handbook and guide.

EXPLANATION OF TERMS

1. DEFINITION OF TERMS.—Statute refers to the laws passed by Congress and the several state legislatures. The term common law refers to that body of law and jurisprudence which was originated, developed, and formulated in England prior to the time of the Colonial settlements in North America, and which has become the law in most of the United States, except where it has been abrogated by statute. An action is a suit or case which one party brings against another in court.

2. COMMON LAW.—In a large measure the common law establishes the rules and regulations under which we live. Legal decisions are precedents which must be followed in other cases of the same general nature. In cases involving similar facts, the lower courts are bound by decisions of the higher courts. The Federal Courts in a particular state must follow the decisions of the Supreme and Appellate Courts of that state, except in cases involving the interpretation of the constitution and laws of the United States or on questions which are purely procedural. The courts in one state are not bound by the decisions of a court in another state. Of course the common-law decision may be set aside by statute or modified when it no longer applies to present conditions.

3. LAW AND EQUITY.—These two terms appear frequently in the following pages and are quite generally misunderstood. The word law signifies a rule of action either written or unwritten. Equity rather looks to the substance than to the form. When an act is equi- table it may be just, even though it has no foundation in the law. Formerly separate courts existed to try cases in equity. The modern tendency is to combine law and equity and to give judges the power to try both law and equity cases. See EQUITABLE REMEDIES and LEGAL REMEDIES.)

4. CIVIL LAW AND CRIMINAL LAW.—The difference between civil and criminal law is not always understood. Criminal law may be defined as the law dealing with offenses against the people. The acts that are crimes are clearly defined by statute and the cases are prosecuted by public officers. Civil law takes in all law not criminal in nature. Wrongful acts may be subject to both criminal and civil actions. If a man steals an automobile, he has committed a crime against the state, and at the same time the person robbed has a civil action against him for the loss. (See TORTS.)

5. CLASSES OF COURTS.—There are four main classes of courts in each of the states. The first are the courts which have jurisdiction over petty criminal offenses and in which minor suits are brought. Second, there are the courts of general jurisdiction, in which more important suits are brought. Next are the Appellate Courts, and finally, there is the Supreme Court, or court of last resort, which reviews decisions of lower courts.

Of course the judicial system varies widely in the different states. For example, the Illinois law provides for Justice of the Peace Courts, which are limited to minor cases. Next comes the County Court, one in each county, which has special and limited jurisdiction. Then there is the Circuit Court, which is the general court of original jurisdiction. Following the Circuit Court come the courts of review, first the State Appellate Court, and at the top, the State Supreme Court. Besides these courts, the larger counties have special courts to hear probate cases and the like. Cities with a population of 50,000 or more have municipal courts with jurisdiction over cases confined to the city.

6. FEDERAL COURTS.—There are three classes of Federal Courts. The lowest is called the District Court, taking its name from the fact that the country as a whole is divided into districts, with one court for each district. Next is the Circuit Court of Appeals, to which appeals from the District Court are taken. And finally, there is the United States Supreme Court, in which appeals may be sought from decisions of the Courts of Appeal and from the Supreme Courts of the several states and in certain criminal cases direct from the Federal District Courts. Upon application made in proper form this court decides whether or not it will review a particular case.

7. BASIS OF APPEALS.—No court will review the decision of a lower court unless the application is founded on errors in the former proceedings. Thus the proof of wrongful admission of or refusal to admit proper evidence in the former trial would be sufficient to obtain a rehearing.

8. EVIDENCE.—Evidence includes all means and ways by which the truth of an alleged fact is established or disproved. Direct evidence is the testimony of a witness or written documents and records, which are competent, relevant, and material to the issues joined and which, if believed, prove the existence of the fact in issue without any inference. Circumstantial evidence is a chain of facts or circumstances, all tending, when connected up, to establish a logical inference or conclusion that such fact does exist.

LAW DICTIONARY

Acknowledgment of Deeds, Mortgages and Releases

All deeds, mortgages, releases, and other documents relating to or affecting real estate must be acknowledged before an officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Chattel mortgages must also be so acknowledged. Notaries public, justices of the peace, masters in chancery, and judges and clerks of courts of record having a seal are authorized to take acknowledgments in most cases.

The laws of some states require the acknowledgment to show, in cases where an instrument is signed by both husband and wife, that the wife signed out of the presence of her husband. Many states also require that where an acknowledgment is taken before a Notary Public, the date of the expiration of his commission must be shown.

Affidavits

1. DEFINITION.—An affidavit is a voluntary statement reduced to writing and sworn to or affirmed before an officer legally empowered to administer it. Affidavits are not testimony in courts of law, because the makers cannot be cross-examined; but a person who makes a false affidavit may be punished for perjury.

2. FORM.—The following is a common form and with certain modifications can be made to apply to most cases.

Common Form of Affidavit

STATE OF ILLINOIS,)

Agency

1. DEFINITIONS.—Agency is the relation between two or more persons by which one person (the agent) represents another (the principal) in the transaction of lawful acts or business. Agents are of two kinds, general and special. A General Agent is authorized to represent the principal in all of his business, or in all business of a particular kind. A Special Agent is authorized to do a specific thing, as sell a farm, buy a house, or transact some special business for the principal.

2. WHO MAY ACT AS PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.—Any person who is able to act for himself, may act as principal. This excludes a lunatic, an alien enemy, or any other person incapable of contracting. On the other hand, any person who is competent to act in his own right, and who is of sound mind and understanding, may act as an agent. Husband and wife may act for each other, except where prevented by the statutes of the particular state. A person unable to contract on his own account, such as a person under age, may sometimes act as an agent. Anyone except a lunatic, imbecile, or infant of tender years may be an agent. Corporations often act as agents.

3. AUTHORITY, HOW GIVEN.—The authority of an agent may be constituted in three ways: By deed under seal, by writing, or by mere word. Express authority is given to an agent by what is called a power of attorney. If the authority is to execute a writing under seal and acknowledged, the power of attorney must be likewise under seal and acknowledged. In a few states, however, this rule has been changed by statute. An agent to sell land, or to do any important business, where he is required to make contracts, draw or sign notes, drafts, or checks, should be appointed by a carefully drawn legal document. The general rule with respect to the liability of a principal for unauthorized acts of his agent is that the principal is liable to third persons for any acts done by the agent for the principal in the course of his duties and within the actual or apparent scope of his agency. Agency may be implied from previous dealings and transactions between the parties. If the principal has held a person out as an agent he will be bound by his acts, even though as a matter of fact the agent had no express authority to represent him. The acts or contracts of an agent made beyond the scope of his authority may be ratified by the principal and when so ratified are binding on the latter.

4. AGENT'S RESPONSIBILITY.—An agent concealing his principal is himself responsible, and if acting fraudulently or deceitfully, is himself responsible to third parties. He cannot appoint a substitute or delegate his authority to another, without consent of his principal. If an agent embezzles his principal's property, it may be reclaimed if it can be identified or distinctly traced. An agent employed to sell property cannot buy it himself, or if employed to purchase property, cannot buy from himself.

5. PRINCIPAL'S LIABILITY.—The principal is liable to the third person for the negligence or unskillfulness of the agent, when he is acting in the fulfillment of the agency business. The principal is liable for all acts of his agent within the scope of his agency, but money paid by an agent can be recovered by the principal, if it has been paid by mistake. The knowledge of the agent relating to the business of the agency is binding upon the principal, and notice to an agent as to matters relating to the agency is notice to the principal.

6. AUTHORITY MAY BE REVOKED.—The authority of an agent may be terminated: First, by the express revocation thereof by the principal. Second, by renunciation of such power by the agent. Third, by the death of the principal. Fourth, by the expiration of the time within which the agent was to perform the acts which were to be done by him, or by his having completed and fully performed the commission and closed the business which he was to transact. Fifth, by the sale of the subject matter of the agency. Sixth, by the insanity of either principal or agent. Seventh, by the bankruptcy of the principal or the agent. A revocation of authority takes effect, so far as the agent is concerned, when he receives notice thereof; so far as the third persons are concerned, when they receive notice of such revocation. Personal notice or its equivalent is required, and is sufficient, to those who have dealt with the agent. Advertising the fact would be sufficient as to all others. Without a sufficient notice of the revocation, a contract made in good faith with the agent after revocation will bind the principal the same as before.

7. SPECIAL RULES OF AGENCY.—An agent cannot delegate his powers to another without the consent of the principal, unless the act to be done is a minor service, or one requiring no personal ability or skill. Both principal and agent are liable if the persons with whom the agent is transacting business do not know of the agency relationship. An agent can receive no personal profit from a transaction.

8. CAUTION.—Persons dealing with agents who are strangers should be very careful to ascertain that the agent has authority to transact business in hand. In all transactions in regard to real estate the authority of the agent should be in writing, signed by the owner of the property, in order to be binding upon him. In all cases of doubt as to the authority of an agent or the extent of his authority, it would be wise to require of the agent a written proof of his agency and the extent of his authority.

9. POWER OF ATTORNEY.—Whenever it becomes necessary to delegate to an agent the power to sign notes, checks, or other legal documents, it is advisable to grant such powers in a written document. Such document is usually called a Power of Attorney. It should be signed by the principal and witnessed, and should set forth exactly and explicitly what the attorney or agent has power to do, and if the agent is to deal in real estate, it is sometimes required by law, and, in any event always advisable, that such Power of Attorney be under seal.

Power of Attorney, General Form

Agreement to Purchase Land

1. MUST BE IN WRITING.—An agreement to purchase real estate must be in writing, and should be signed by both buyer and seller. The writing need not mention the amount to be paid for the land. It should be signed in ink, but is not invalid if signed with a lead pencil or even with a rubber stamp. The entire contract need not be on the same sheet of paper, and it sometimes happens that two or more sheets of paper constitute the contract, as in cases where the agreement to purchase land is completed through correspondence between the two parties.

2. EXCEPTIONS.—There are some exceptions to the rule that an agreement to purchase real estate is not enforceable unless in writing. For example, if A sells a piece of property to B and receives the purchase price, and without a written agreement allows B to take possession of the property, and if B makes valuable and lasting improvements on the property, the courts will compel A to give B a deed to the property.

3. A COMMON MISUNDERSTANDING.—It is quite generally believed that, if a purchaser makes an oral agreement to purchase land and pays part of the purchase price, he can compel the seller to give him a deed to the real estate. This is not the law. The purchaser, however, can compel the seller to return the money he has paid.

4. OPTIONS.—An option is a contract by which the owner of property agrees with the other party that he shall have the right to purchase the property at a fixed price within a certain time. For example A agrees to sell a piece of property to B at a certain price within a certain period of time, for which B gives A a valuable consideration. B must either exercise his option and purchase the property within the time limit, or forfeit his consideration. All options must be in writing. If no time limit is fixed in the agreement, the option must be exercised within a reasonable time.

5. TRANSFERRING OF TITLE.—In most real estate contracts the seller agrees to furnish the buyer with a good and merchantable title. He also agrees to transfer title to the property by a Warranty Deed, which warrants the title in him and the buyer against any loss which might be occasioned by defects in the title. A purchaser should always insist that the contract provide that the seller is to furnish and deliver a merchantable title. The contract generally requires the seller to furnish, also, evidence that he has good title. This is done by producing either an Abstract, Guaranty Policy, or Torrens Certificate, showing good title in the seller.

6. ABSTRACT OF TITLE.—An abstract is a statement in substance of what appears in the public records affecting the title to the land in question from the time it was owned by the government down to date. The public records are searched and the matters shown therein. An abstract will show all transfers, mortgages, judgments, tax sales, liens of all kinds, court proceedings and everything of record affecting the title to the property. These abstracts are prepared by private concerns or individuals known as abstract companies or abstracters. To determine whether or not the seller's title is good, the purchaser should have the abstract examined by an attorney competent to pass upon the law of real property. This examination by an attorney will reveal the validity or merchantability of the title. The objections to a clear title may be simple or exceedingly complex, and require the services of a competent attorney in that field. Usually the seller pays all of the expenses incidental to bringing the abstract down to date. The purchaser generally pays the examination fee.

7. TITLE INSURANCE OR GUARANTY POLICY.—Under this system the title company issues a policy guaranteeing the holder of the policy against any loss he might sustain by reason of any defect in the title, whether of record or otherwise, existing before or at the time of the issuance of the policy. This system is becoming more popular in cities because of the demand for facilities to expedite real estate transactions and also because of the protective feature.

8. TORRENS SYSTEM.—The Torrens System is a system providing for the registration of land titles in such a manner that, when the title is once registered, a certificate of the registrar of titles will show the exact condition of the title. In order to register a title under this system, it is necessary that a court proceeding be had first in which the decree of the court settles and establishes the title. After this has been done, the registrar of titles will issue an official certificate which will show who has title to the land, and what defects, if any, appear in his title. After the title to a particular parcel of property has been so registered, all subsequent transactions affecting the title to that property must be filed with the registrar of titles, and are noted upon the certificate of title. This enables a purchaser to determine the true state of the title by merely examining the certificate of the registrar. The purpose of the system is to simplify the transfer of real estate, and it is now in force in a number of states.

Agreement for Sale of Land

This agreement, made and entered into this day of by and between party of the first part, and party of the second part, witnesseth:

1. The said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $. to be paid as hereinafter provided, hereby agrees to sell unto the party of the second part the following described tract of land:

[Description]

2. The said party of the second part hereby agrees to purchase said premises at said consideration of $. and to pay the same as follows: (set out terms of payment).

3. The said party of the first part, upon receiving the final payment mentioned above, shall execute and deliver to the said party of the second part, or to his assigns, a duly acknowledged Warranty Deed, conveying to him or them the fee simple title to said premises, free and clear from all incumbrance.

In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Form of Option

For and in consideration of the sum of dollars to me in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I hereby grant unto an option for days from the day of 19...., to purchase for the sum of dollars, the following described lands situated in the County of and State of [Insert description of property], upon the following terms and conditions: [insert terms of sale], said to signify his intention to take or reject the same by due notice in writing within the time above specified, and a failure to serve such notice within the time specified shall terminate this option without further action, time being the essence of this agreement.

In case said notice shall be served in due time, then thirty days shall be given in which to examine abstract or other evidence of title, and close the sale.

Auctioneer

1. DEFINITION.—An auctioneer is a person employed to sell property to the highest bidder at public sale.

2. AGENT FOR BOTH BUYER AND SELLER.—An auctioneer is the exclusive agent of the owner until he accepts the purchaser's bid and knocks down the property to him. On accepting the bid the auctioneer becomes the agent of the purchaser also, and thus represents both parties.

3. COMPLETION OF THE SALE.—A sale by auction is completed when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer, or in any other customary manner. Until such announcement is made, the auctioneer may withdraw the property from sale unless the sale has been advertised to be without reserve. Any bidder may also withdraw his bid at any time before the fall of the hammer.

4. RESPONSIBILITY OF AUCTIONEER.—Authority to sell property does not imply power to sell at auction. Thus a purchaser buying goods from an auctioneer, when he knows the auctioneer has no authority to sell them, acquires no title to the property thus purchased. The seller or owner is not bound by any statements by the auctioneer. An auctioneer must accept the most favorable bid. He cannot refuse to accept legitimate bids. He is justified, however, in rejecting the bids of insane or drunken persons, minors, trustees of the property, and persons who refuse to comply with the terms of the sale.

5. THINGS AN AUCTIONEER CANNOT DO.—An auctioneer is not permitted to delegate his duties to another, except minor or incidental duties. He cannot act contrary to the wishes and instructions of the owners in any matters relating to the details of the sale. He may not permit a bidder to withdraw his bid after its acceptance, without the consent of the owner. He cannot sell the property to himself, or employ another to bid it in for him. He is not permitted to sell at private sale contrary to the owner's instructions.

Automobile

1. THE RIGHT TO USE THE HIGHWAYS.—The public has a right to use the public roads to travel and transport property. Drivers of automobiles have an equal right on the highways with other vehicles, but they do not have any greater right. All have the same rights and the same restrictions. The courts hold that all travelers have equal right to use the highways. Thus, a pedestrian has the same right as the driver of an automobile. The state cannot exclude non-residents from the public roads, or place greater restrictions or burdens on non-resident motorists than those imposed on its own citizens.

2. PARKING.—In the absence of any city ordinance or statutory regulation an automobile may be left at the side of the road after shutting off the engine and setting the brakes. However, an automobile so left after dark must be properly lighted.

3. LICENSE.—The several states issue licenses to the owners of automobiles, motorcycles, and trucks, permitting them to use the public highways. Many cities require a municipal license. Such a license is neither a contract nor a tax. It is simply a privilege, and as such does not pass to a purchaser of the vehicle and may be revoked for any good reason.

4. THE LAW WITH REFERENCE TO RENTED VEHICLES.—Suppose A rents his automobile to B for a certain consideration. The law will not hold A responsible for the negligent acts of B even if B is an unskilled driver. On the other hand if A knew when he rented the car that B was an immature child or of low mentality, or under the influence of alcohol, the courts would hold him responsible. If the owner lends his car with a chauffeur, he will be held liable for the negligent acts of the chauffeur. In case of damage to the rented car, the renter is liable only if it can be proved that he did not exercise ordinary prudence and care. Should the renter sell the car without the owner's authority, the owner can recover even from an innocent purchaser. The owner of an automobile is entitled to a fair compensation for its use, even if no definite sum is agreed upon, and he can collect a reasonable hire if his automobile is used by another without his knowledge or consent. Criminal liability also is attached to the unlawful use of another's automobile.

5. THE SPEED OF AUTOMOBILES along a public road is regulated by law. Some state laws prescribe the maximum rates of speed for the business district, residence district, and country. A municipality has the right to modify the speed laws in accordance with local requirements. Courts of most states hold that it is the duty of a driver on a public highway to have his car under control and to operate it at a reasonable rate of speed, having regard to the traffic and other conditions. He must so operate it as to avoid endangering the life or limb of any person or the safety of anyone's property.

6. THE LAWS OF THE ROAD are intended to prevent collisions and accidents. 1. Vehicles approaching each other from opposite directions are required to pass each other on the right. If, therefore, two automobiles collide in a street which is wide enough for safe passage, the driver on the wrong side of the road is responsible for the other driver's injury, provided, of course, the other was not himself guilty of negligence. 2. Each driver must pass on his right side of the center of the traveled road. This applies even when the road is covered with snow, to side roads, and to roads under construction. 3. It is the duty of every driver to exercise reasonable care in avoiding accidents or injuries to others. This rule applies just as strongly when the driver's car is on the right side of the road. 4. At street intersections it is customary to allow the right of way to the vehicle approaching from the right and, in many states and municipalities, this rule has been embodied in the statutes and ordinances. 5. It is the duty of the driver to keep his car under control at all times. 6. If one willfully or negligently drives a car on a street or road at an unlawful speed, thereby killing another, he may be guilty of homicide. 7. The driver of a car may be charged with negligence if, without warning to others, he suddenly changes the course of his direction or backs his car.

7. THE FITNESS OF THE DRIVER.—The driver of an automobile should be physically and mentally fit. A man who is subject to fainting spells or epileptic attacks has no right to drive a car upon the public highway. The same rule applies to one with defective eyesight, but it has been held that proper eyeglasses may restore the competency of the driver. No person should ever attempt to drive an automobile while intoxicated, thereby endangering the lives of others.

8. THE CHAUFFEUR'S LIABILITY.—As a general rule the owner is liable for the acts of his chauffeur, provided the chauffeur is acting within the scope of the owner's business. However, should the chauffeur use the car without the consent or knowledge of the owner, or should he be using it for his own business and without the owner's consent, the owner is not liable for the driver's acts. The same rule applies when the owner's son uses the parent's car without his knowledge or consent. If the car is run with his knowledge by a member of his family, or for the convenience of other members of the family, the parent may be liable for the negligent acts of the driver. Most states require a chauffeur to take out a license.

9. MINOR.—The statutes of most states forbid children under a certain age to drive automobiles. The ages vary in different states. The owner of a car, therefore, who allows a child to operate it, may be held responsible for accident or injury resulting from the child's negligence.

10. THE CHAUFFEUR'S RIGHTS.—A chauffeur may recover damages from his employer for injury received while operating the car, provided that the employer is in some way responsible for the injury. On the other hand, if his injury was due to a defective part, he could not recover from his employer, unless it so happened that the employer knew of the defect and the chauffeur did not. If a chauffeur feur should be injured while riding in a car driven by the owner, the chauffeur could recover for injuries sustained due to the owner's negligence.

11. THE OWNER'S INJURY.—If the owner of a car be injured in any way through the wrongful acts or negligence of his chauffeur, the chauffeur may be held liable.

12. GARAGE KEEPER.—A garage keeper is bound to exercise reasonable care with reference to vehicles entrusted to him. The owner of a car is not liable to third parties for the negligence of the garage keeper or his employees in the care and operation of his automobile. If a garage keeper or his employee operates an automobile the garage keeper is liable for any damage done to the car or to third persons. A public garage, while not considered a public nuisance, is subject to public regulations as to location, odors, noise and fire hazards. A garage keeper is entitled to a reasonable compensation for storage of a car or for repairs which he has been instructed to make. He is not liable for fire damage to the automobile, unless the fire is caused by his own negligence or that of his employees. He is liable for theft, if he failed to use reasonable precautions to guard against it.

13. USED AUTOMOBILES.—There are two points to keep in mind when purchasing a second-hand automobile. Such automobiles are usually sold "as is" and the motorist often complains when he finds the car is not in perfect running order. If the cylinders prove to be scored or the bearings are loose, the purchaser has no redress at law. The law presumes that if any warranty was made, it would have been reduced to writing in the form of a contract.

14. BILL OF SALE.—Statutes in most states require that a bill of sale be given, and the purchaser should be careful to see that the statute is complied with. The bill of sale should be drawn in accordance with the laws of the state where the purchase is made. The following form will answer the purpose in most of the states:

Bill of Sale

Know all men by these presents, that I (here insert name and address of party selling the car) in the county of, state of, in consideration of (here insert amount of money to be paid party selling by party buying) dollars this day to me in hand paid, do hereby grant, sell, transfer and deliver unto the said (here insert name of party buying) the following goods and chattels, to-wit: (Then insert name of automobile, its model, the engine number and the car number, also the type of car, its color, together with any other information which will help to identify it); to have and to hold said goods and chattels to the said (name of purchaser), his executors, administrators and assigns to their use forever.

I hereby covenant with the said grantee that I am the lawful owner of the said goods and chattels; that they are free and clear from all incumbrances; that I have good right to sell the same and that I will warrant and defend the same against the lawful claims and demands of all persons.

In witness whereof, I, the said (name of party selling) hereunto set my hand and seal the day of, 19.

Signature of party selling Seal

15. IN CASE OF ACCIDENTS.—Accidents will happen in spite of the most careful driving. If you happen to be in an accident, here are a few things to remember:

- a. Do not drive away without reporting the facts to the police or nearest police station, or without giving your name, address, and license number to the other party involved. Leaving the scene of an accident may constitute a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment.
- b. Be sure to get the name and address of the other party, or if he drives away, his license number.
- c. Get the names and addresses of all persons who witnessed the accident, or saw the results of it, including all injured persons.
- d. Try to visualize just how it happened, remember your own position and that of the other party, both before and after the accident, and note carefully the wheel marks on the road or pavement.
- e. Be calm and courteous. Do not admit that you are in the wrong or accuse the other party.
- f. Do not make immediate settlement or offer to do so, or incur any expense except for necessary medical relief.

Bailment

1. DEFINITIONS.—A Bailment is a delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, with the understanding, expressed or implied, that the person receiving it shall return it when that purpose has been fulfilled. A Bailor is one who makes a bailment or delivers goods to a bailee. A Bailee is a person who receives goods of another to hold according to the purpose of delivery.

2. BAILOR AND BAILEE.—To create this relation the property must be delivered to the bailee. Thus if A takes his car to a public garage to remain over night, the garage owner becomes a bailee for hire. The contract of bailment also exists when a man takes a suit of clothes to a tailor shop to be altered, or when a farmer takes a load of oats to a mill to be ground.

3. THE LAW WITH REFERENCE TO LOST PROPERTY.—The finder of lost property is entitled to keep it until the owner is found, and the general rule is that the finder has good title to it against everyone but the true owner. Usually the law provides the necessary steps to be taken in the case of lost property. The finder must make an honest effort to locate the owner. Failing in this, he may retain the property and maintain his rights as against all others. Should the true owner appear, the finder has no lien on the property, unless a reward has been offered for its return.

The finder does not always take title to the article found. The article must actually have been lost, not merely laid down or aside voluntarily, and forgotten. Thus, if a woman lay down a package in a department store, the owner of the store is the proper custodian, rather than the finder.

4. THE BAILEE'S RESPONSIBILITY.—A bailee can, provided the limitation is not in violation of law or public policy and does not excuse him from negligence or fraud on his part, limit his liability by agreement. He becomes the custodian of the goods and is generally required to exert reasonable care against accident or loss. As a rule he cannot be held responsible for loss resulting from the nature of the goods stored. For example if a truck load of fruit arrives at a cold storage plant, the owner is not responsible for any loss due to the condition of the fruit when it arrived. On the other hand, if an employee of the storage company negligently allows the goods to spoil, the owner of the fruit can recover from the storage company.

Suppose your bank grants you the privilege of keeping a strongbox in the bank building without making any charge therefor. The bank, of course, is not bound to exercise as much care as a regular safety deposit company, but it is required to take reasonable precaution, as much care as it uses to protect its own property. Suppose the cashier steals the box. Would the bank be liable to you for the loss? If the bank exercised reasonable care, and if the cashier were a long-trusted employee against whom there was no cause for suspicion, the bank would not be responsible for the loss.

5. THE BAILEE'S DUTY.—The bailee is usually a keeper only. However, if he is keeping livestock, he must supply the food necessary to the animals' good condition. Milch cows must be properly milked; and in case of sickness animals must be given proper medical care and attention. In every case the bailee is required to exercise reasonable care for the goods in the bailment.

Bankruptcy

1. THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.—The Constitution of the United States grants to Congress the power to make uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Act of 1938, popularly known as the Chandler Act, now contains the law on this subject.

2. COURTS.—The Act gives jurisdiction in bankruptcy cases to the district courts of the United States and of the territories and possessions to which the Act applies, and to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

3. BANKRUPTS.—Bankrupts are of two classes, voluntary and involuntary. Voluntary bankrupts are those who are declared bankrupt upon their own petitions. Under the new Act, any person (or corporation) owing debts, except a municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporation or a building and loan association, is entitled to the benefits of the Act as a voluntary bankrupt. Involuntary bankrupts are those who are declared bankrupt by the proper courts, and who have committed one or more of the acts of bankruptcy hereinafter specified. Any natural person, and any corporation except a building and loan association, a municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporation, owing debts to the amount of $1,000 or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt.

4. ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY.—As stated in the preceding paragraph, before a person can become an involuntary bankrupt, it is necessary for the petitioning creditors to show that he has committed an act of bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Act specifically defines what constitutes an act of bankruptcy. A person has committed an act of bankruptcy when he has:

a. Conveyed, transferred, concealed, removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed any part of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or any of them; or

b. Transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditor over his other creditors; or

c. Suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a lien upon any of his property through legal proceedings, and not having vacated or discharged such lien within thirty days from the date thereof or at least five days before the date set for any sale or other disposition of such property; or

d. Made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or

e. While insolvent or unable to pay his debts as they mature, procured, permitted, or suffered voluntarily or involuntarily the appointment of a receiver or trustee to take charge of his property; or

f. Admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt.

5. FILING A VOLUNTARY PETITION.—Any person who is entitled to the benefits of the Bankruptcy Act and wishes to avail himself of the same should file his petition, in duplicate, with the clerk of the court in the district where he has had his principal place of business, or resided, or has had his domicile for the preceding six months, or for a longer portion of the preceding six months than in any other jurisdiction. He must also file, with the petition, a schedule, under oath and in triplicate, setting forth: the names of his creditors and their residences if known, the amount due each, and what security they hold, if any; a description of the petitioner's property, showing its nature, location and value; and his claim for legal exemptions, if any. The judge then hears the petition, and either adjudicates the petitioner bankrupt or dismisses the petition.

6. FILING AN INVOLUNTARY PETITION.—Where a person owing debts to the amount of $1,000 has committed one or more of the acts of bankruptcy enumerated above and does not belong to one of the classes excluded by the Act (as wage earners and farmers), a petition to have such person adjudged a bankrupt may be filed by three or more creditors who have provable claims against him, fixed as to liability and liquidated as to amount, which amount in the aggregate, in excess of the value of securities held by them, to $500 or over; or if all of the creditors of such person are less than twelve in number, then the petition may be filed by one of such creditors whose claims equal such amount. The petition must be filed in triplicate with the clerk of the court and must include the following information and allegations: the name of the alleged bankrupt; that he has had his principal place of business within the district for a longer portion of the six months immediately preceding the filing of the petition than in any other judicial district; that he owes debts to the amount of $1,000 and is not a wage earner or a farmer; the names and addresses of the petitioning creditors; that they have provable claims against said alleged bankrupt, fixed as to liability and liquidated as to amount, amounting in the aggregate, in excess of securities held by them, to $500 or over; the nature and amount of petitioner's claims; that within four months next preceding the filing of the petition, the alleged bankrupt committed an act of bankruptcy; and a statement as to what acts on his part are alleged to have constituted said act of bankruptcy. The petition must also be duly signed and verified. Upon the filing of the petition, together with a filing fee of $30, the clerk will issue a subpoena to the alleged bankrupt, returnable within ten days. When the alleged bankrupt has been served with the subpoena and a copy of the petition, he is required to file his answer within five days after the return day. If it is necessary, the court may appoint a receiver to take charge of the alleged bankrupt's property to prevent loss.

7. HEARING IN INVOLUNTARY PROCEEDINGS.—If the alleged bankrupt fails to appear and plead within the time allowed, the court will either adjudicate him bankrupt or dismiss the petition. If the alleged bankrupt wishes to deny any of the matters set out in the petition, he may do so by filing his sworn answer within the time allowed by law. The matter will then be set down for hearing, and on the day set the petitioners must either prove the allegations in their petition or the court will dismiss it on motion of the alleged bankrupt. If they do prove them, the court will proceed to enter the order of adjudication. Within five days after the order adjudging him bankrupt, the bankrupt is required to file schedules of his creditors and property similar to those filed by a voluntary bankrupt.

8. STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS.—The law also requires a bankrupt to file in triplicate with the court at least five days prior to the first meeting of his creditors, a statement of his affairs in such form as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court. The purpose of this provision is to furnish helpful information to the creditors and trustee to assist them in administering the bankrupt's affairs as well as in their examination of the bankrupt.

9. FIRST MEETING OF CREDITORS.—After adjudication, that is, the order of court finding a person to be bankrupt, the procedure with reference to voluntary and involuntary bankrupts is the same. The court causes the first meeting of creditors to be held not less than ten nor more than thirty days after adjudication. The meeting is held at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt had his principal place of business, resided, or had his domicile; or if that place would be manifestly inconvenient, the court may designate a more convenient place for the meeting. The judge or referee presides. He may allow or disallow claims presented there, and is required publicly to examine the bankrupt. He may also permit the creditors to examine him. At this meeting the creditors appoint a trustee, who is to act as their representative and take charge of the bankrupt's property. Relatives of the bankrupt, and, where the bankrupt is a corporation, its stockholders, officers, and members of its board of directors, are not allowed to vote. The new Act provides that the creditors may also appoint a committee of three or more creditors, which committee may consult and advise the trustee in connection with the administration of the estate. The bankrupt must be present at the first meeting of creditors.

10. SUBSEQUENT MEETINGS.—The law provides that the court shall call a meeting of creditors whenever one-fourth or more in number of those who have proved their claims shall file a written request for a meeting. Whenever the affairs of the bankrupt's estate are ready to be closed, the court orders a final meeting of creditors. A case in which there are no assets may be closed without such final meeting.

11. VOTING AT MEETINGS.—Matters submitted to creditors at their meetings are passed upon by majority vote in number and amount of claims of all creditors whose claims have been allowed and who are present. However, creditors holding claims which are secured or have priority are not entitled to vote in respect to such claims, and such claims are not counted in computing either the number of creditors or the amount of their claims, except in cases where the amounts of such claims exceed the values of such securities and priorities, and then only for such excess. The new Act also provides that claims of $50 or less shall not be counted in computing the number of creditors voting or present at meetings, but shall be counted in computing the amount.

12. PROOF OF CLAIMS.—In order to share in any dividends which may be paid to creditors out of the property of the bankrupt, it is necessary for a creditor to file his claim in court or with the referee within six months after the first date set for the first meeting of creditors, to prove it and have it allowed by the court. The law requires that a proof of claim be filed, consisting of a statement under oath in writing and signed by the creditor, setting forth the claim; the consideration therefor; whether any, and if so, what securities are held therefor; whether any, and if so, what payments have been made thereon; and that the claim is justly owing from the bankrupt to the creditor. If the claim is founded upon an instrument in writing, such as a promissory note, such instrument, unless lost or stolen, shall be filed with the proof of claim. If such instrument has been lost or stolen, a sworn statement of such fact and the circumstances of such loss or destruction must be filed with the claim. After the claim has been allowed, such instrument may be withdrawn by permission of court upon substitution of copies.

Claims so properly presented, if liquidated claims, are allowed unless objected to by parties in interest or by the court. If objected to, they are set down for hearing before the court or referee.

Only fixed and liquidated claims and claims provable in law or equity are provable in bankruptcy. Contingent claims are not provable.

13. DISCHARGE OF BANKRUPT.—Under the present Bankruptcy Act, it is not necessary for an individual who has been adjudged bankrupt to make application for his discharge in bankruptcy. The act provides that the adjudication shall operate as an application for discharge. This is not true with reference to corporations, however. A bankrupt corporation may file an application for discharge within six months after its adjudication. In the case of individuals, the law now provides that after the bankrupt has been examined, either at the first meeting of creditors or at a meeting specially called for that purpose, the court shall enter an order fixing the time for the filing of objections to the bankrupt's discharge, that notice of said order shall be given to all parties in interest, and that at the expiration of the time fixed, if no objection has been filed, the court shall discharge the bankrupt. The effect of a discharge in bankruptcy is to release the bankrupt from all of his provable debts except the following (1) taxes; (2) liabilities for obtaining money by false pretenses, or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, or for alimony due or to become due, or for maintenance or support of wife or child, or for seduction, or for breach of promise of marriage accompanied by seduction, or for criminal conversation; (3) debts not scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy; (4) liabilities created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity; (5) wages earned within three months before the date of commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy due to workmen, servants, clerks, or traveling or city salesmen, on salary or commission basis, whole or part time, whether or not selling exclusively for the bankrupt; (6) debts for moneys of an employee received or retained by his employer to secure the faithful performance by the employee of the terms of a contract of employment.

14. COMPOSITIONS.—After a bankrupt has filed the schedule of his property and list of his creditors and has been examined in open court or at a meeting of creditors, he may, if he desires, offer terms of composition. That is, he offers to make immediate payment of a certain proportion of each claim provided the creditor will release him from the balance. This is, of course, precisely what happens by operation of law if the bankruptcy proceeding is carried to a conclusion, but a composition is often more desirable because it can be carried out at once, thus dispensing with a good many of the costs of longer proceedings, and preserving the estate in cases where the property is of a nature that will deteriorate or accumulate expense during a delay. Then, too, if the composition is confirmed by the court the debtor is spared some of the ignominy of having gone through bankruptcy and received a discharge. Before being filed in court the composition must have been accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, which number must also represent a majority in amount of such claims. When the application for confirmation of the composition is filed in court, the money necessary to carry the composition into effect, together with that necessary to pay all debts which have priority, and to pay the costs of the proceedings which have already taken place, must be deposited in such place as shall be designated by and subject to the order of the judge. If the judge is then satisfied at a hearing that the composition is for the best interests of the creditors and is offered by the bankrupt in good faith, he will confirm it and dismiss the case after each creditor has received his share of the money set aside by the bankrupt as a consideration for the composition. The confirmation of a composition has the same effect as a discharge in that it releases all debts of the bankrupt that would be released by a discharge in regular form.

Bonds

1. DEFINITION.—A bond is defined to be an obligation in writing under seal. It is a form of contract which is almost infinite in variety. The parties to the bond are the obligor and the obligee, the former being the one who makes the promise and the latter the person to whom the promise is made.

2. A SIMPLE BOND is an instrument promising payment of money at a certain time, and generally bears interest at the rate specified in the bond. Nearly all corporate and municipal bonds are of this character and contain no condition except for the payment of the amount of the bond at a certain time and place with a certain specified rate of interest. Frequently interest coupons are attached to the original bond, providing for the payment of the several installments of interest as they come due.

The following is the form commonly in use for such bonds:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
JEFFERSON CITY, STATE OF MISSOURI.
RENEWAL SCHOOL BOND.
INTEREST 6 PER CENT, PAYABLE SEMI-ANNUALLY

The Board of Education of the City of Jefferson, County of Cole, and State of Missouri, being legally organized under and pursuant to an act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri entitled "An act to revise and amend the Laws in relation to Public Schools in Cities, Towns and Villages," approved April 26th, 19...., for value received promise to pay to the bearer ten years after the date hereof ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS at the St. Louis National Bank, in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, together with interest thereon at the rate of Six per centum per annum from the date hereof, which interest shall be payable semi-annually at said St. Louis National Bank in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, on the surrender of the proper interest coupons hereto attached. This bond shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the said Board of Education of the City of Jefferson at any time after the expiration of Five years from the date hereof, and is issued under and pursuant to an act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled "An Act to authorize Boards of Education to issue renewal funding School Bonds to be sold or exchanged for the purpose of meeting and paying matured or maturing bonded indebtedness of school districts and for levying special tax to pay the bonded indebtedness of school districts," approved April 11th, 19....

In Testimony Whereof: the said Board of Education has caused this bond to be signed by the President, countersigned by the Secretary, authenticated by the seal of said Board of Education and attested by the Clerk of the County Court of said County of Cole, with the seal of said Court affixed this First day of July, 19....

JOHN JONES, President.

WM. SMITH, Secretary.

GEO. SMILEY, Clerk County Court.

3. BONDS OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS conditioned for the faithful performance of their duties are of almost infinite variety and in common use. All state, county, town and city officers having in their hands moneys or funds of any character belonging to such corporation are required to give bonds for the proper performance of the duties of their office. The following form of a bond of city treasurer can be used with a few slight changes for almost any office:

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That we, John Jones, Henry Smith, and Charles Marshall of the City of Naperville, County of Du Page, and State of Illinois, are held and firmly bound unto the City of Naperville in the penal sum of Twenty Thousand ($20,000) Dollars, for the payment of which, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators jointly and firmly by these presents.

Witness our hands and seals this 14th day of July, 19....

The condition of the above obligation is such that whereas the said John Jones has been duly elected to the office of City Treasurer of the City of Naperville; Now if the said John Jones shall faithfully perform all the duties of said office and shall account for and pay over all moneys that may come into his hands as such Treasurer, according to law and the ordinances of said City and the order and direction of the city council of said City, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

JOHN JONES.

[Seal.]

HENRY SMITH.

[Seal.]

CHARLES MARSHALL.

[Seal.]

4. OFFICERS OF CORPORATIONS are often required to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties. The following form can be used for nearly all such bonds:

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That we, James Lord, John Williams, and Charles Smith, are held and firmly bound unto the Naperville Manufacturing Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, in the penal sum of Ten Thousand ($10,000) Dollars, good and lawful money of the United States, for the payment of which, well and truly to be made to said corporation or its assigns, we bind ourselves jointly and severally.

Witness our hands and seals this 14th day of July, 19....

The condition of the above obligation is such that whereas the said James Lord has been elected President of the Naperville Manufacturing Company; Now Therefore, if the said James Lord shall well and truly perform the duties of his said office and shall account for and pay over all moneys that shall come into his hands as such President, and do all required of him by the by-laws of said corporation now in force or hereafter enacted, and obey all orders given him by the board of directors of said corporation, then this obligation shall be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

JAMES LORD.	[Seal.]
JOHN WILLIAMS.	[Seal.]
CHARLES SMITH.	[Seal.]

5. INDEMNIFYING BONDS.—Bonds are also frequently given to indemnify persons who incur liability for another in nearly all walks of life. The following form may be used:

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That William Marsh, Principal, and John Henry, Surety, are held and firmly bound unto John Jones in the penal sum of One Hundred ($100) Dollars, lawful money of the United States, for the payment of which, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly, severally and firmly by these presents.

Witness our hands and seals this 1st day of June, A.D. 19....

The condition of the above obligation is such that whereas the said John Jones has been surety for the above William Marsh on his note for One Thousand Dollars ($1000) payable to the order of Charles William, due in one year from the date hereof, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

Now, Therefore, if the said William Marsh shall well and truly pay the said note with all interest thereon when the same comes due and shall from time to time and at all times hereafter save, keep harmless and indemnify the said John Jones of and from all actions, suits, costs, charges, damages, and expenses whatsoever, including attorney's fees, which shall or may at any time hereafter happen or come to him for any reason, by reason of his becoming surety on said note, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

WILLIAM MARSH,	[Seal.]
JOHN HENRY.	[Seal.]

6. EXECUTOR'S BOND.—Executors, administrators, guardians, and conservators are required to enter into bonds to be approved by the proper court before they are allowed to enter upon their duties as such. The forms for such bonds, however, vary in the different states.

Broker

1. DEFINITIONS.—A broker is a person who transacts business for another, commonly in stocks, bills, notes, shipping, insurance, real estate, pawned goods, merchandise, etc., using the name of the principal. He does not have custody of the property. Brokerage is the fee charged by a broker for transacting business.

2. WHY BROKERS ARE EMPLOYED.—Brokers are often employed to transact business or to negotiate bargains between different individuals. By specializing in a single line or a limited number of lines of business, they acquire a knowledge and skill that an average merchant does not possess. It is often advantageous for large firms to employ brokers to buy their raw material. In large cities brokers are extensively employed. The business of brokerage is regulated largely by the customs of the trade.

3. A BROKER'S LIABILITY.—A broker usually has no special property in the goods he sells. If he does not disclose the principal's name he is liable to the same extent as other agents. He must serve faithfully and cannot act for both parties in the same transaction without the consent and knowledge of both. Neither can he delegate his powers without the principal's assent. He is bound to obey the express instructions of his principal, and to keep accurate accounts of his transactions.

4. A BROKER'S COMPENSATION.—Usually a broker's compensation is a commission or percentage of the value of the thing sold or exchanged. If the amount of the compensation is not fixed, the custom of the trade rules. A broker is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services.

5. A REAL ESTATE BROKER must act for his principal alone. He is employed to negotiate sales and exchanges of land, and often has such additional duties as renting real estate, collecting rent, and procuring loans. To gain his commission on the sale he must produce a customer who is ready, able and willing to accept and live up to the terms of the sale. A property owner cannot avoid paying the commission or brokerage by selling the property himself, or at a lower price than he listed with the broker.

6. PAWNBROKERS.—The business of a pawnbroker, the rate of interest he may charge, and the sale of pawned goods are usually regulated by law. A license is usually required and the business is always subject to regulation and control. Suppose A takes a watch to a pawnbroker who advances him $20.00. A, or his assignee, or the purchaser of the pawn ticket, may redeem it within the fixed time, or even beyond that time, if the pawnbroker has not exercised his right to sell the watch. A pawnier has the right to assign or sell his interest in the watch. If A fails to redeem the watch, the pawnbroker can usually hold him for any deficiency after the watch is sold.

Carriers

1. DEFINITIONS.—A carrier is a person or company that undertakes, or whose business it is, to carry persons or merchandise for hire. Carriers are of two kinds, private and common. A Private Carrier is one who carries only occasionally, and not as a public business. Such a carrier need not serve all who wish to employ him, but is liable for negligence in transporting the goods he accepts. A Common Carrier is one whose regular business it is to carry goods or passengers from place to place for all persons who elect to employ and pay him.

2. EXAMPLES.—A private carrier is usually an individual who, without being engaged in such business as a public employment, carries merchandise from one point to another for a consideration. He is bound to exercise such care of the property as a man of ordinary intelligence would of his own property. Examples of common carriers are railroad companies, steamship companies, streetcar companies, taxicab companies, truckmen, and express companies, who hold themselves out to carry goods or passengers from one place to another, for all persons who offer to employ them.

3. RESPONSIBILITY.—Common carriers are generally responsible for all loss and damage caused by transportation from whatever cause, except the act of God or of the public enemy, and they are bound to carry all goods which are offered them, provided such goods come within the class of articles they hold themselves out to carry. The carrier is not responsible for losses occurring from natural causes, such as frosts, fermentation, or natural decay of perishable articles, or the necessary and natural wear in the course of transportation, provided it exercises all reasonable care to have the loss or deterioration as little as practical.

4. ACT OF GOD.—The term "Act of God" is generally held to mean such casualties as occur without human intervention. Great floods, electrical storms, tornadoes, and earthquakes have been held to come within this classification.

5. LOSS BY FIRE.—The carrier is liable for any and all loss occasioned by accidental fire.

6. PERISHABLE GOODS.—Carriers are not responsible for loss to fruits that decay in their possession through no fault of theirs or for goods shipped in defective boxes, such as glassware not properly packed and other articles that are easily broken. Goods must be properly packed in order to make the carrier responsible.

7. BILL OF LADING.—Bill of lading is the receipt given by the common carrier to the owner of the goods desiring to have the same shipped, and should contain a description of the quantity, the marks on the merchandise, the name of the shipper or the person sending the goods, and the consignee, the name of the person to whom the goods are shipped, place of departure and place of discharge of the goods and the price of freight, and also weight of the separate packages and the number of the car in which the same were shipped.

8. EQUAL LIABILITY.—Railroad Companies and other carriers who allow express companies to carry parcels and packages on their cars or other vehicles are liable as the common carriers for all damages which occur, without regard to the contract between them and such express company.

9. BAGGAGE.—In the transportation of the baggage of passengers the liability of the carrier for loss to the same is the same as in case of transportation of goods for hire, and in case of loss the carrier must make it good.

10. WHEN LIABILITY BEGINS AND ENDS.—The responsibility of the common carrier begins upon the delivery of the goods for immediate transportation. A delivery at the usual place of receiving freight or to the employee of the company in the usual course of business is sufficient. The responsibility of the carrier as such terminates after the arrival of the goods at their destination and sufficient time has elapsed thereafter for the owner to have received them during business hours. After the expiration of such time the responsibility of the carrier is simply that of a warehouseman and he is required only to keep the goods with ordinary care.

11. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.—A carrier can limit his liability by contract, unless forbidden by statute. Thus a bill of lading given as a receipt for a freight or express shipment, or a receipt given a passenger limiting the amount of the carrier's liability on his baggage is considered binding by the courts, and relieves the carrier of additional liability. The general rule is that a carrier may relieve himself from all liability except for loss or damage caused by his own negligence.

12. THE PASSENGER'S RIGHTS.—The law requires common carriers to carry all passengers who pay the required fare, and who are in a sufficiently intelligent condition to travel. The carrier must exercise great care in transporting passengers and is liable for injury due to the carrier's negligence. If the passenger was himself negligent and contributed to his own injury, he cannot as a rule hold the carrier liable. Although a sleeping-car company is not a common carrier, it is liable for negligence in failing to protect the passengers from theft or from injury resulting from the negligence of its own employees or agents.

13. DIFFERENT LINES.—Where goods are accepted for shipment to points beyond the line of the carrier to whom they are first delivered, such carrier is responsible for the delivery of the goods at their destination. The law now provides under such circumstances the carrier shall be liable for any loss or injury occurring during the shipment whether on its own line or that of the connecting carrier.

14. DEMURRAGE is the sum charged by transportation companies for the non-removal of goods from their cars within the time fixed by the rules of the companies. The rules of a large number of railroad companies require that the car be unloaded within twenty-four hours after its arrival at the destination and a fixed rate of demurrage for each twenty-four hours of delay after the expiration of the usual time for unloading is imposed on the persons to whom goods are shipped.

15. THE CARRIER'S RIGHTS.—The carrier is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services, and may demand payment in advance. The shipper is liable for freight, unless the carrier agrees to look exclusively to some other party; or after delivery the carrier may recover the amount of freight from the consignee. But freight may be collected only for the goods actually delivered, unless the delivery be prevented by the owner, or it be agreed that freight shall be payable regardless of losses by the way. The carrier also has a lien on the goods for his freight and advances on such goods, and may refuse to deliver until such charges be paid. This lien has priority over the owner's right of stoppage in transit, and the claims of the general creditors of the owner or consignee. A carrier by water also has a lien for salvage, and for customs duties advanced on imported goods.

16. TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES are not common carriers and may therefore establish reasonable regulation for the transmission of messages. Like common carriers, however, they are required to serve all who apply and offer to pay the charges, and are liable for damages when messages are not sent promptly and accurately. They come within the classification of public service corporations, and are subject to legislative regulation and control as to kind of service to be rendered and rates.

Chattel Mortgage

1. DEFINITION.—A chattel mortgage is an instrument by which the owner conveys conditional title to personal property to secure the payment of a debt or the performance of a contract or other obligation. It is a pledge that the debt will be paid. Any personal property that may be sold may be mortgaged, such as livestock, machinery, farm implements, life-insurance policies, corporation stock, and crops. The mortgagor is the person who conveys the property. The mortgagee is the person to whom the transfer is made.

2. FORM OF MORTGAGE.—The usual form of a chattel mortgage is a bill of sale with the conditional clause stating the terms of the loan, and that on the mortgagor's failure to pay, the mortgagee may take possession of the property. Any person competent to make a contract, or his agent, may make a chattel mortgage. Partners or joint tenants may mortgage jointly on their individual interests. A corporation may also mortgage its personal property.

Chattel mortgages are usually given to secure notes in the same way in which real estate mortgages are given to secure notes. Greater strictness, however, is required in the acknowledgment, docketing, and recording of chattel mortgages than in the case of real estate mortgages. A chattel mortgage must be acknowledged before a justice of the peace or some other person authorized by law to take acknowledgments.

3. DESCRIBING THE PROPERTY.—The property mortgaged must be described clearly enough to enable third persons to identify it, but this is determined largely by the nature of the chattels. "All" articles in a stated place is generally a valid description.

4. FORECLOSURE.—When the mortgagor fails to pay his debt, the right of the mortgagee to proceed in taking the property is regulated by law. In most chattel mortgages a clause is included permitting the mortgagee to seize and sell the property should the mortgagor fail to make payment.

5. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—A chattel mortgage remains in effect as between the parties themselves until it is released or becomes barred by what is known as the statute of limitations. However, in order to preserve its validity as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers, it must be refiled or renewed periodically. The periods vary in different states. They are generally from one to three years. To sell property covered by a chattel mortgage for a valuable consideration without notifying the purchaser of the existence of the mortgage is a criminal offense. Statutes in a few states provide that notes secured by chattel mortgages must show on their face that they are secured by chattel mortgages, or they are absolutely void; and that defense which the maker of the note secured by chattel mortgage could make against the original payee, is good against the note in the hands of an indorsee, even though indorsed before maturity. In other states, chattel mortgages on household goods must be signed by both the mortgagor and his wife. (See MORTGAGE.)

Chattel Mortgage with Power of Sale

Know all men by these presents, that I, A. B., in consideration of the sum of $..... paid by C. D., have bargained and sold, and by these presents do hereby sell and convey to said C.D., the following goods and chattels, to wit: (describe the articles mortgaged, or refer to them as the goods and chattels mentioned in the schedule hereto annexed), and which are now in my possession.

Whereas, the said A.B. is justly indebted to C.D. in the sum of $....., payable on the day of, 19...., with interest at six per cent from the day of 19...., (upon a promissory note of even date herewith, or for goods sold and delivered).

Now the condition of the above obligation is such that if the said A.B. shall well and truly pay said C.D. said sum of money and interest when the same shall become due, then this conveyance shall be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect. It is also agreed that said A.B. may retain possession of the said mortgaged property until said debt become due. But if default be made in the payment of said sum or any part thereof, the said C.D. and his assigns are hereby authorized to sell said goods and chattels, or so much thereof as will be necessary to satisfy the amount then due, together with the cost and expenses incurred by reason of said default.

Citizenship

1. DEFINITION.—A citizen is a member of a state or nation who enjoys political rights and is entitled to public protection. Citizenship, therefore, carries with it the duty of allegiance to the government and the right of protection from it.

2. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—A citizen residing in any of the several states owes an allegiance both to the United States and to the state, and may demand protection from each government. A citizen residing in the District of Columbia is a citizen of the United States only. A citizen's ordinary rights are protected by the state government.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction or persons born abroad of American parents are citizens of the United States. Formerly a woman took the citizenship of her husband upon marriage. Now marriage does not affect the American citizenship of the wife unless she chooses to renounce it. Neither does naturalization of the husband operate to confer citizenship upon the wife.

3. NATURALIZATION.—In order to be naturalized, an alien must follow the forms prescribed by law. His entry into the country must have been lawful, and he must furnish a certificate showing the time, place, and manner of his arrival. He must declare on oath, before the clerk of an authorized court in the district in which he resides, his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States and of residing here permanently, and he must renounce all allegiance to any foreign power. Not less than two nor more than seven years after he has made such declaration of intention, he must file his petition for admission to citizenship. He must declare on oath in open court that he will support and defend the Constitution of the United States, and renounce allegiance to any foreign power. The law also requires that no alien shall be admitted to citizenship unless immediately preceding the date of his petition he has resided continuously within the United States for at least five years, and within the county where he resided when he filed his petition for at least six months. Naturalization of the parent confers citizenship on his minor children if they reside in the United States at the time or subsequently begin to reside here permanently.

4. ALIENS' RIGHTS.—Aliens have the right to hold and transfer title to real estate. At common law they are entitled to purchase, own, and sell personal property, engage in business and to make contracts or wills. In return they must obey the laws of the land in which they reside.

Contracts

1. DEFINITIONS.—A contract is a mutual agreement between two or more competent parties for a valuable consideration to do or not to do a particular thing. A Simple Contract may or may not be in writing and requires no seal. A Specialty is a contract in writing which does require a seal to the signatures. An Executed Contract is completed; an Executory Contract is one still to be executed or completed. An Express Contract is a contract actually made between two or more parties; an Implied Contract, as the name suggests, is one in which some of the provisions or the entire agreement must be implied from previous agreements, from existing customs, or from the acts of the parties.

2. REQUIREMENTS.—A contract must have:

- a. Two or more competent parties,
- b. Legal subject matter,
- c. Consideration, and
- d. Assent of the parties. There cannot be a contract when any of these are wanting.

THE FORM OF THE CONTRACT

3. In many written contracts the parties are referred to as "party of the first part," "party of the second part," according to the order in which their names first appear. It does not matter which name is written first.

4. A written contract begins with a statement of the date, the names of the parties, and their places of residence. Then appears a statement of the consideration, followed by a full statement of all that the first party agrees to do, and all that the second party agrees to do.

5. Next appears a statement of the penalties or forfeitures in case either party does not faithfully and fully perform, or offer to perform, his part of the agreement.

6. The contract ends with the signatures of the parties and their seals and the signatures of witnesses. (A seal is simply the mark of a pen around the word "seal," written after the signature, or the word "seal" in parentheses printed or typewritten on the form.)

7. Competent lawyers should be employed in the drafting of a contract.

8. Errors in grammar or spelling do not affect the legality of the agreement.

9. If the language should be obscure on certain points, the court will try to determine the intent of the parties when they entered into the agreement, providing the intent can be gathered from the terms of the instrument itself. It is of the utmost importance that the terms of the contract be specifically and explicitly stated. Competent attorneys should be employed.

10. When an agreement is written it must all be in writing. It cannot be partly written and partly oral.

THE VITAL PART OF A CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION

11. DEFINITION.—A consideration is the thing which induces a party to make a contract. It is the substantial cause or reason inducing the parties to enter into an agreement.

12. A SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION.—The law does not require that the consideration should be a good or bad bargain. As long as something is done or suffered by either party, always providing it is not illegal, the consideration is good. The smallest consideration is sufficient to make it legal. The value of the consideration is generally unimportant.

13. A VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.—A valuable consideration is one which is equal to money or may be translated into monetary terms. It is sometimes defined as "money or its equivalent."

14. A GOOD CONSIDERATION.—A good consideration is one which is based upon love, gratitude or esteem, or blood relationship. A good consideration is not sufficient unless the agreement has to be performed by one or both parties.

15. IMMORAL CONSIDERATION.—All considerations which are immoral are consequently illegal, and contracts based upon them are generally void.

THE LAW GOVERNING ALL KINDS OF CONTRACTS

16. An intentional alteration of a contract in a material part, by one party without the consent of the other, after its execution, discharges the other party from his obligations under the contract.

17. A contract made by a minor is not binding upon him, yet he can hold the party with whom he contracts, to all the conditions of the contract.

18. A fraudulent contract may be binding on the party guilty of fraud, although not laying any obligation on the part of the party acting in good faith.

19. A contract for the sale or purchase of personal property over a certain amount—ranging from $30 to $500 in the different states—must be in writing.

20. A contract which cannot be performed within a year must be in writing.

21. If no time of payment is stated in the contract, payment must be made on the delivery of the goods.

22. A contract totally restraining the exercise of a man's trade or profession is void, but one restraining him in any particular place is not void.

23. An offer or proposal, which includes the essential parts of a contract, becomes a contract as soon as accepted. Generally the acceptance must be at the time of receiving the offer. The offer may be withdrawn at any time before it has been accepted. Offers may be made and accepted within a reasonable time by word of mouth, telephone, telegraph, or mail.

24. A contract required by law to be in writing cannot be changed by verbal agreement.

25. A contract cannot be rescinded except by consent of both parties unless one party has given the other legal grounds to rescind, such as default, fraud, etc.

26. A contract binding in the place where it is made is binding everywhere, but courts of one state will not enforce contracts made in another state where to do so would be in violation of the statutes or public policy of their own state.

27. Each party to an agreement or contract should retain a signed copy.

28. While signatures or contracts written with a pencil are valid in law, it is always safer to write them in ink.

CONTRACTS THAT ARE NOT LAWFUL

29. A contract to commit a breach of peace.
30. An agreement for immoral purposes.
31. An agreement procured by threats, violence, or fraud.
32. Wagers or bets (cannot be collected by law).
33. Interest at rates higher than the maximum rate fixed by law cannot be collected.
34. A contract with an intoxicated person, lunatic, or minor (cannot be enforced by the other party).
35. A contract in violation of a statute in the state in which it is made.
36. An agreement to prevent competition on a sale under an execution.
37. An agreement to prohibit the carrying on of a trade throughout the state.
38. Where consent to an agreement is given by mistake, such agreement cannot be enforced.
39. The right to vote or hold a public office cannot be sold by contract.
40. A contract without a consideration, such as a promise to make a gift, cannot be enforced.
41. Two or more persons cannot intentionally make a contract to willfully injure a third person.
42. Contracts for concealing felony or violating public trust, for bribery and extortion, are prohibited.
43. Useless things cannot become the subject of a contract, such as agreeing not to go out of the house for a month.
44. A verbal release without payment or satisfaction for the debt is not good. Release must be under seal, unless made for some new consideration.
45. If two parts of a contract are in direct conflict with each other, the former part holds good in preference to the latter.
46. Contracts in which there is misrepresentation or concealment of material facts cannot be enforced by the party guilty of such misrepresentation or concealment.
47. If a thing contracted for is not in existence at the time of making the contract (as in a case where parties contract for the purchase and sale of a horse not knowing that the horse is dead at the time) the contract is not valid.
48. If a person agrees to serve as a laborer or clerk, he cannot be compelled to fulfill his agreement; damages, however, can be recovered for a failure to perform.
49. An agreement with a thief to drop a criminal prosecution, in consideration of his bringing back the goods and paying all damages, is not good, and will be no bar to a future prosecution.
50. Guardians, trustees, executors, administrators, or attorneys cannot take advantage of those for whom they act by becoming parties to contracts in which the persons for whom they are acting are interested.

51. QUASI CONTRACTS.—A quasi contract may be defined as a contract implied in law, or in the nature of a contract. It is a legal obligation resulting from some direct or indirect benefit accruing to one party from the other without any express agreement on the part of the first. The law, nevertheless, compels him to pay. For example:

- a. One who has reason to believe that payment for goods tendered is expected, must not accept them unless he intends to pay for them. If he accepts the goods, he can be compelled to pay for them.
- b. A man employed under the promise of good wages or division of profits is entitled to fair treatment, even though such an arrangement is no contract at all.
- c. Money paid on an illegal contract or on one which is void because of non-existence of the property, may be recovered.
- d. If an express company delivers valuable goods to the wrong party, the company can recover from the person who wrongfully accepted them.
- e. If, on account of a mistake, a man pays his grocery bill twice for the same period, he can recover.
- f. Action to recover can be brought against a man who sells property not his own, or which proves to be worthless.
- g. All these questions hinge on the presence or absence of consideration in the agreement.
- h. Such liability is imposed regardless of consent, as distinguished from a contract implied in fact, which is an actual contract, and based on presumed intent or consent.

52. STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—In every state there is a statute called the statute of frauds which provides that certain contracts must be in writing to bind the parties. Thus:

- a. Agreements for the sale of real estate are unenforceable unless they are in writing.
- b. A contract for the sale of goods for more than a certain amount, which amount varies in different states, must be in writing or there must be actual delivery and acceptance of the goods or part payment therefor.
- c. A contract must be in writing to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or mis-carriage of another person or to charge any executor or administrator upon any special promise to answer any debt or damages out of his own estate.

- d. A written contract is necessary to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage, or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof.

DAMAGES FOR VIOLATION OF CONTRACT

53. A statute which provides no penalties for the lawbreaker is merely the expression of a wish, or the giving of advice. Similarly the contract must be binding on both parties. This element of mutual obligation is the very essence of a contract.

54. Where no actual loss has been sustained by the violation of a contract, the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages only. Thus, A contracted to drill a well for B and to complete same within a specified time or forfeit $1000.00, said amount being intended not as an assessment of the damages which would probably be actually sustained, but to secure the performance of the contract by the imposition of a penalty. The courts will not compel A to pay the $1000.00 damages unless his failure to complete the well has actually meant a loss of $1000.00 to B. They will, however, permit B to recover from A such damages as he actually sustained as a result of A's failure to complete the well within the specified time.

55. Expected profits on speculations in real property cannot be recovered in case of a violation of contract.

56. Failure on the part of the seller to convey real estate or deliver personal property according to agreement entitles the plaintiff to recover damages or to sue for specific performance of the contract.

57. In case of loss of goods by a common carrier the plaintiff is entitled to the value of the goods where they were to be delivered, less the freight on such goods.

58. If a party contracts to employ another for a certain time, at a specified compensation, and discharges him, without cause, before the expiration of the time, the employee can obtain judgment for the full amount of wages for the entire unexpired balance of the time, provided he is unable to secure employment in the same line of work, after making an earnest effort to do so. Should he obtain work at a lower wage he can collect the difference.

59. To prevent lawsuits and disputes the amount of damages for the violation of contracts is sometimes fixed by the parties themselves by inserting in the contract some such provision as the following:

AND IT IS FURTHER AGREED that the party that shall fail to perform this agreement on his part shall pay to the other the full sum of (here state amount), as liquidated damages.

General Form of Agreement

This agreement, made and entered into this day of, 19...., by and between Clarence Ranck of Aurora, County of Kane, State of Illinois, party of the first part, and Charles Vandersall of Columbus, Ohio, party of the second part, witnesseth:

In consideration of (insert consideration), it is agreed between the parties hereto as follows:

Said party of the first part agrees (insert agreement of party of the first part).

Said party of the second part agrees (insert agreement of the party of the second part).

In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Copyright

1. DEFINITION.—A copyright is the exclusive right to reproduce, publish, and sell a literary or artistic work. Under the United States Copyright Law, a copyright may be granted for the following classes of material:

- (a) Books, including collections, anthologies, and encyclopedias;
- (b) Magazines and newspapers;
- (c) Lectures, sermons, or other addresses for oral delivery;
- (d) Dramatic and musical-dramatic compositions;
- (e) Musical compositions;
- (f) Maps;
- (g) Works of art, including models and designs;
- (h) Reproductions of works of art;
- (i) Scientific or technical drawings or plastic work;
- (j) Photographs;
- (k) Prints and pictorial illustrations;
- (l) Motion-picture photoplays;
- (m) Other motion pictures.

Copyrights can also be secured on compilations, abridgments, arrangements, or adaptations, whether of non-copyrightable material or, with the permission of the copyright holder, of material that has been copyrighted already. Republished works that include new material are also copyrightable.

2. HOW TO OBTAIN.—To secure a copyright on a work which is to be reproduced for sale or public distribution, the work should be published with a copyright notice, which may be in the following form:

Copyright, 1960, by
JONES, SMITH, AND COMPANY

On maps, photographs, pictures, and other works where it is difficult to place a complete copyright notice, the letter C enclosed in a circle, ©, is used; it must be accompanied by a symbol or mark of the owner of the copyright, and his name must appear elsewhere on the work.

After publication of the work, two copies of the best edition (or one copy in the case of a work by a foreign citizen and published first in another country) should be sent to the Copyright Office, Washington, D.C., with an application for registration.

Books by American authors and proprietors or alien authors and proprietors domiciled within the United States must be accompanied by an affidavit stating that the typesetting, printing, and binding were done in the United States.

Forms for the affidavit and application for registration are supplied by the Copyright Office upon request.

3. FEES.—The fee for registration of a published work is $4; payment of this sum also entitles one to a certificate under seal of the Copyright Office.

The charge for the renewal of a copyright is $2. Copyrights may be assigned to other persons.

4. HOW TO OBTAIN COPYRIGHT FOR OTHER ARTICLES.—A copyright may also be obtained on certain works not published or reproduced for sale by filing an application for registration; the fee is $4. It should be accompanied by one manuscript of the work, if it is a lecture, sermon, address, or dramatic or musical composition; by one print, for copyright of a photograph not intended for general circulation; and by a photograph or reproduction in the case of works of art and scientific or technical drawings or plastic works. To obtain a copyright on a motion-picture photograph not published or for sale, the application for registration must be accompanied by the title, description, and a print from each scene or act.

An application for registration of another type of motion picture must be accompanied by the title, description, and two prints from different sections of the picture.

5. DURATION OF COPYRIGHT.—A copyright is valid for 28 years and may be renewed for the same length of time; provided application for renewal is made and registered within one year prior to the expiration of the original term of copyright. It cannot be renewed again. If an author is not living, his copyright may be renewed by the widow or widower, or his children. If none of these are living the executors have the right of renewal; and if there is no will the copyright may be renewed by the next of kin. The person to whom a copyright has been assigned may also renew it, at the expiration of the original 28-year period.

6. PRINTS AND LABELS.—Copyrights may be taken out on prints and labels for advertising purposes. They must be published first with a notice of copyright. Application for registration should then be filed by the owner or author. These copyrights are also effective for 28 years and may be renewed for a similar period.

7. UNIVERSAL COPYRIGHT.—The United States is a party to the Universal Copyright Convention that became effective in September 1955. There are over forty contracting states to this convention.

Under the terms of the agreement each state provides for the protection of the rights of authors and other copyright owners in literary, scientific, and artistic works, including writings, music, drama, cinematographic works, paintings, engravings, and sculpture. Works first published in any member nation will generally get the same protection in other member nations as they afford their own nationals. The copyright symbol © accompanied by the name of the copyright owner and the date of publication is sufficient to obtain protection for the work in any country that is a party to the Universal Copyright Convention.

Foreign works need not fulfill the United States requirement of deposit and registration if they are first published in a country party to the Universal Copyright Convention or if they are written by nationals of any of the contracting states.

Applications for registration of claims to copyright are filed with the Register of Copyrights, Library of Congress, Washington 25, D.C. These application forms as well as information circulars covering the various subjects are furnished free upon request to the Register of Copyrights. Proposed changes to the copyright law, by the Subcommittee on Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, may be obtained from the U.S. Government Printing Office.

Corporations

1. DEFINITION.—A corporation is a group of persons empowered to act as a single individual, and treated by the law as such in many respects.

2. KINDS OF CORPORATIONS.—Corporations known as Business Corporations are the most common. Public Corporations are agencies of the government. Railroad corporations, and other public service corporations, though performing a public service, are nevertheless Private Corporations. Then there are Religious, Charitable and Beneficial Corporations, usually organized for beneficial purposes, not for profit. Quasi Corporations, such as school districts, resemble corporations in some ways. They can own and manage real estate, make contracts, sue and be sued like any other corporation. A Close Corporation is one where the capital stock or ownership is confined to one family or distinct group of individuals.

3. FORMATION OF CORPORATION.—The formation of a corporation involves numerous legal questions, and should never be attempted without the services of a competent corporation lawyer. In most states the first step after having a certain amount of stock subscribed and paid for is to file with the Secretary of the state a statement giving name, object, amount of capital stock, amount of stock paid for, location of office, and duration of the proposed corporation. The charter is then issued and a meeting of stockholders is called to elect directors. State laws vary, but usually three or more individuals may form a corporation. Corporations created in one state may transact any lawful business in another state, and they can acquire and transfer property as individuals, provided they comply with the law of the state in which they do business and obtain a license to do business there.

4. LIFE OF A CORPORATION.—A corporation exists until the expiration of its charter unless it fails or is discontinued for other good reasons. Most charters are now perpetual. The stockholder's rights may pass from one to another by sale or by inheritance.

5. CAPITAL STOCK.—Corporations generally have assets composed of money, real estate, buildings, machinery, patents, copyrights, etc. Capital stock is divided into parts called shares, and the owners of the shares are called stockholders. By this method of promotion the necessary money for the enterprise may be collected from many different sources, and unlike a partnership the individual stockholders are not personally liable for the debts of the corporation. In large measure these facts account for the great popularity of the corporate form of organization. Corporations may increase or decrease the amount of their capital stock, provided the change is made in good faith, without intent to defraud.

6. WHO MAY SUBSCRIBE FOR STOCK.—Anyone capable of making a contract may subscribe for the stock of a corporation. Minors are excluded. Where fictitious subscriptions are used to induce others to buy, the purchaser may refuse to pay his subscription. If already paid for he may recover the money, or he may keep the stock and sue for damages. The selling of subscriptions to stock is now very strictly regulated by statute.

7. THE STOCK CERTIFICATE is a written statement of the number and par value of the shares to which the holder is entitled. In other words, it is the evidence of ownership. A stockholder may prove ownership even though a certificate has never been issued him. When the capital stock of a corporation is increased each shareholder usually has the right to purchase a portion of the new stock before it can be offered for sale to outsiders.

8. PREFERRED STOCK.—This kind of stock takes preference over the ordinary or common stock of a corporation. The holders of preferred stock are entitled to a stated percentage annually out of the net earnings of the corporation before a dividend can be declared on the common stock, or to some other preference set out in the certificate. Preference, rather than actual payment, is guaranteed. Holders of preferred stock usually have the right to vote at any stockholders' meeting on the same basis as the holders of common stock. In some states the law requires that each share of stock have equal voting rights with every other share.

9. COMMON STOCK is the ordinary stock of a corporation. The holders are entitled to all the rights incident to their ownership.

10. TRANSFER OF STOCK.—This is provided for by statute. Usually the seller must assign the certificate to the transferee, execute a power of attorney, and deliver the certificate to the company for cancellation. The transfer agent then issues a new certificate to the purchaser.

11. A SUBSCRIPTION FOR STOCK is a contract and must be in writing. An agent cannot refuse to receive a subscription from a competent person, nor can he release a subscriber or alter the terms of the contract. The subscriber must inform himself as to his obligations and cannot evade payment unless he can prove fraud.

12. THE SHAREHOLDER'S LIABILITY.—As stated previously, a corporation differs from a partnership in that the shareholders in a corporation are liable only for the amount of stock they own. Each member of a partnership is liable for all the debts of the firm. However, in the case of National Banks the shareholders are liable for double the amount of their holdings in case the bank fails, if that much more is required to pay the debts. The amount of a stockholder's liability is fixed by statute. A stockholder in any corporation is liable for the full amount of his stock, whether paid in full or not.

13. RECEIVERSHIP.—When a corporation fails, a receiver is sometimes appointed by the court to take charge of its affairs. The receiver has the power to convert the property into cash, levy and collect assessments from the shareholders, where authorized by law, and pay dividends to the creditors, as in the case of bankruptcy proceedings. The receiver may be an individual, a group of individuals, or a trust company.

14. MANAGEMENT.—The power of a corporation rests in its members or individual stockholders—except as restricted or limited by law. Unless the charter or state laws alter the case, policies are determined by a majority vote; usually a shareholder has as many votes as he has shares in the corporation. The right to vote in a stockholders' meeting is determined by the stock record of ownership as of the date of meeting, or on the date the books are closed prior to the meeting. The bylaws of the corporation generally fix the time for the closing of the books. A stockholder has the right to vote even if no certificate has been issued to him. He may vote in person or by proxy. An executor or trustee may vote the stock of the estate.

15. MEETINGS.—The statutes or the bylaws of a corporation usually prescribe the manner in which meetings are to be called, and the bylaws fix the time and place of meetings. Should the proper officer fail to call a meeting at the required time, the meeting may lawfully be held later, and if he should refuse to issue the proper notice, he may be compelled by mandamus proceedings to do so. Regular Meetings are held in the manner set forth by the charter or bylaws, and the object of the meeting need not be stated in the notice. On the other hand, special meetings may be called at any time on proper authority, but the notice must state the object of the meeting, and no other business may be there transacted. Any authorized meeting may be adjourned from time to time or from day to day, and the adjournments must be considered as the same meeting. Even if a meeting is illegally called it becomes a valid meeting by ratification of the proper official or by the shareholders. Notice of meeting is sent to whoever has the right to vote the stock.

16. DIRECTORS.—Management of a corporation is vested in the directors. Most corporations delegate managerial powers to directors who are elected either by a majority vote of the shareholders, or by a cumulative system of voting in states in which such system is used. Their powers are established by statute, charter, or bylaws. As a rule they have general supervision over the business of the corporation. Their authority may be delegated to committees, corporate officials, or individuals. Thus the president, the secretary, the treasurer, and other officers and committees of the corporation are chosen by the board of directors to act in the capacity of agents, in administering its affairs. A director may not act for the corporation individually, but his unauthorized acts would bind the corporation if subsequently ratified. A director may not act both for the corporation and for himself in the same transaction. Unless otherwise provided, directors are not entitled to compensation for their services.

17. THE DIRECTORS' LIABILITY.—The directors of a company are liable to the company and to shareholders and outsiders for negligence, fraud, or for acts committed outside the scope of their authority. These are questions of fact to be determined by the courts. The directors of a corporation are personally liable for its debts if it can be proved that they incurred the obligations knowing that the corporation was insolvent. They have been held personally, jointly, and severally liable as partners, for debts of the corporation contracted in a state in which the company was found to have been doing business without having taken out a license.

18. THE OFFICERS of a corporation are usually the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer chosen by, and often from, the board of directors. The ordinary rules of agency govern their powers and duties.

The President is the chief executive officer and usually presides at meetings of the Board of Directors.

The vice-president takes over the duties of the president when, for any reason, the latter is unable to perform them. Quite frequently there are numerous vice-presidents assigned to different duties.

The secretary is the keeper of the records and the chief clerk of the corporation. He usually has the custody of the corporate seal.

The treasurer has charge of the corporation's finances. He is usually under bond for the faithful performance of his duties.

19. DIVIDENDS.—A dividend is a payment to the shareholders out of the net profits of the corporation. It may be in actual cash, in property or in additional stock. When stock is selling above par on the exchange, corporations sometimes grant shareholders the right to purchase additional stock at par instead of declaring a cash stock dividend. The law will not permit the payment of dividends out of capital, or from borrowed money, without the consent of the stockholders, and the directors would be liable for such a fraudulent payment. Furthermore, illegally paid dividends may be recovered for the benefit of creditors. The net profit of a corporation is an asset, and not secure against creditors unless, or until, the money has been declared as a dividend. When the dividend has been legally declared payable, no action can be brought by creditors to stop its payment. The directors must act in good faith, but they cannot be compelled to pay dividends when they do not deem it advisable to do so. The courts hold that dividends must be general on all stock of the same class, so that each shareholder in that class will receive his just share, and that the dividends shall be paid to the owner as determined by the books of the company.

20. LIABILITIES OF A CORPORATION.—Through its agents or servants a corporation can be guilty of slander, libel, false representation, trespass, or negligence, and can be sued accordingly.

21. THE SHAREHOLDER'S RIGHTS.—A shareholder has the right to inspect the company's books at any reasonable time for any proper purpose. Furthermore, he may employ an expert accountant to go through the records if he has reason to believe that the affairs of the company are not being handled properly.

Criminal Law and Procedure

1. DEFINITION.—A crime is an act in violation of some existing prohibitory statute and the common morality of the country. An individual cannot compromise a criminal wrong, for crime is a matter for the State to settle. Crimes may be classified as felonies, or more serious offenses; and misdemeanors, or less serious offenses; but the distinction is largely an arbitrary one.

2. BURDEN OF PROOF.—The burden of proof is upon the State. In other words a person accused of a crime is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved. The verdict of the jury must be unanimous to convict. If any doubt remains in the minds of the jury, after hearing all the evidence, it is its duty to acquit the defendant, and once acquitted, a prisoner cannot be brought to trial a second time for the same offense in the same jurisdiction.

3. DEFENSES.—Two defenses which are often raised are the defense of insanity and that of self-defense. A person who cannot distinguish right from wrong is insane and cannot be held responsible for his acts, but the insanity must be proved. Also, a person may defend his person, family, or property and may use such force as is necessary. If he can show that the act was committed in self-defense, he is guilty of no crime.

4. CONFESSION.—A legal confession must be voluntary and free from all compulsion, either physical or mental. Third-degree methods are unlawful, and a confession procured by the use of threats or violence has no standing in court.

5. TRIAL BY JURY.—A person accused of a crime is guaranteed the right to a fair and impartial trial by a jury of twelve, and the right to be represented by a competent lawyer. The trial must occur in the county where the crime was committed unless a "change of venue" is granted. The defendant is entitled to a change of venue if it can be proved that on account of prejudice on the part of the judge or jury the accused could not there receive a fair trial.

6. HABEAS CORPUS.—A writ of habeas corpus is sometimes issued by the court to prevent people from being unlawfully deprived of their liberty. The prisoner is brought before the court and is released unless cause can be shown for his detention. This is a fundamental right under the Constitution.

7. CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.—The first step in criminal procedure is generally the issuing of a warrant by a justice of the peace or other judicial officer. When arrested the accused is either placed in custody, or, if he can furnish a satisfactory bond, he is released on bail awaiting trial. If the offense is a misdemeanor the case is usually tried and settled before the justice. If it is a felony, the justice holds a preliminary trial, certifying his findings to the grand jury. Acting in an investigating capacity, the grand jury may indict the accused, and the case is tried on its merits in the regular criminal court. If the grand jury fails to indict, the charge may be dropped on account of insufficient evidence.

Criminal Law in Brief

8. ADULTERY.—In many of the states, it is a crime for any married man and woman not married to each other to live together openly as man and wife.

9. ACCESSORY TO THE CRIME.—Any person assisting another to commit a crime or to escape from the scene of the crime is equally guilty with the principal.

10. ASSAULT AND BATTERY.—A person who threatens, or attempts to strike, another person is guilty of assault, even though the threat is not followed by actual battery. Assault becomes battery when injury is actually done. The slightest unlawful touching may be battery.

11. BRIBERY consists in the offering or giving of money or other valuable consideration to a public officer or one performing a public duty, as an inducement for him to commit an unlawful act. The giver and the receiver of the bribe are equally guilty.

12. BIGAMY.—A person having more than one husband or wife at one time is guilty of the crime of bigamy.

13. BURGLARY consists in the unlawful breaking into and entering of the building of another with the intent to commit a crime.

14. BAIL means the sureties who bind themselves to have the accused present in court when required for trial.

15. CONTEMPT OF COURT.—Any attempt to obstruct justice or to injure the dignity of the court is punishable by the action of the court.

16. CONSPIRACY.—When two or more persons agree to do an unlawful act, the agreement is called a conspiracy, and is in itself a crime.

17. EMBEZZLEMENT is the wrongful appropriation and use of the personal property of another person by one to whom it has been voluntarily turned over for some lawful use.

18. EXTORTION is the asking and accepting of unlawful fees by a public officer.

19. FALSE PRETENSE.—It is a criminal offense to obtain money or other things of value by the false or fraudulent representation of a past or existing fact.

20. FORNICATION is illicit sexual intercourse other than adultery, as that between unmarried persons. It is punishable in some states.

21. FORGERY is the false making, or the material alteration, of a written instrument, contract, or any other legal paper with intent to defraud.

22. LARCENY is the unlawful appropriation and use of a person's property. It differs from embezzlement in that the original taking is unlawful.

23. MANSLAUGHTER is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice or premeditation.

24. MAYHEM is the act of maiming, disfiguring, or cutting away any part of the human body.

25. MURDER is the unlawful taking of a human life with malice and premeditation.

26. MALICIOUS MISCHIEF is a crime which consists of the willful and intentional injury of another's property.

27. OFFENSES ON THE HIGH SEAS are tried

by the country under whose flag the ship is sailing.

28. PERJURY is the false swearing of a person under oath. A person inducing another to perjure himself is equally guilty.

29. RAPE.—It is a felony to have sexual intercourse with a girl or woman without her consent.

30. ROBBERY is stealing property from another by force and intimidation. It is a felony punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

31. SEDUCTION.—To have intercourse with a woman of chaste reputation through false promises of marriage is a crime.

32. STOLEN PROPERTY.—It is a crime to buy, receive, or conceal stolen property with the intent not to return it to the rightful owner. When buying property, demand proof of the ownership.

33. TREASON.—It is treason to make war against, or to assist the enemies of, the existing government. It is punishable by death. A foreigner, owing no allegiance to the government, cannot be guilty of treason.

34. UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.—It is a criminal offense for two or more persons to assemble in contemplation of some unlawful act.

Deeds

1. DEFINITIONS.—A deed is a written document, under seal, conveying real estate. There are two kinds of deeds in general use: warranty deeds and quitclaim deeds. Any person of legal age, competent to transact business and owning real estate, may convey it by deed. The seller is called the grantor, the buyer the grantee.

2. A WARRANTY DEED is one in which the seller or grantor warrants the title to be good, and agrees to defend the same against all parties. Such a deed usually provides:

(a) That the seller has a right to convey the real estate; (b) that he is the owner of the land mentioned in the deed; (c) that the land is free and clear from all former and other grants, bargains, sales, liens, taxes, assessments, and encumbrances of any kind; (d) and that the purchaser will have quiet enjoyment of the real estate; that is, that he will not be put out of possession by anyone having superior title. If it afterwards develops that the grantor did not have the right to sell, or if the grantee discovers an encumbrance on the land, or if he has any trouble about the title, the purchaser has a good cause of action against the seller.

3. A QUITCLAIM DEED conveys only what interest the grantor may have in the property. This form of deed is often given by one whose title to the real estate may be defective. The seller conveys only whatever interest he may have. A quitclaim deed contains no warranties.

4. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—

- a. Deeds must be written, typewritten, or printed.
- b. The names of the parties and places of residence are generally written first.
- c. The property must be fully described. The description should be by bounds, or by divisions of United States surveys, or by subdivisions into blocks and lots, as shown on the records in the county recorder's office.
- d. The deed must express a consideration, and be signed and sealed by the grantor or grantors. A deed without consideration is void.
- e. Numbers should always be written in words followed by figures in parentheses, thus, Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00).
- f. If the grantor is married, both he and his wife should join in the deed, and it should be executed and acknowledged by both.
- g. The acknowledgment of a deed can be made only before persons authorized by law to take the same, such as justices of the peace, notaries, masters in chancery, and judges and clerks of the courts.
- h. The deed takes effect upon its delivery to the person authorized to receive it, and should be recorded at once.
 - i. After the signing and acknowledgment of a deed the parties have no right to make the slightest alteration.
 - j. Never purchase real estate without a careful examination of the title by a trusted attorney.
 - k. Always procure an abstract of title or guaranty policy before advancing money or signing a contract for purchase of land or lots.
- l. A deed in which a mistake has been made can be corrected in all cases of fraud or accident.
- m. In investigating the title to real estate, the attorney is bound to make a careful examination of the records and report the facts and his conclusions with respect to the condition of the title, and is liable for any injury resulting from his negligence.
- n. A deed is considered recorded as soon as it reaches the recording officer, who generally notes upon it the day, hour, and minute when it was received by him.
- o. If the land is a gift and no price is paid for it, it is customary to insert "in consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations."

Dower

1. DEFINITION.—Dower is the provision which the law makes for the support of a widow out of her deceased husband's estate. Unless modified by statute this interest consists of the use for life of one-third of her husband's land after his death. During the husband's life, the law protects the wife's interest by prohibiting the sale of real estate unless she joins with him in signing the deed. If the property is sold and she does not sign the deed, she still has her dower right in the property. The interest which a husband acquires in the land belonging to his wife after her death is called curtesy. In some states the term "curtesy" has been abolished and the word "dower" is substituted, so that the latter term applies to the interest of either the husband or the wife in the land of the deceased spouse.

2. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—(a) The dower right is regulated by widely differing statutes in the several states. (b) If the land is subject to a mortgage which was signed by the wife along with her husband, or a prior lien, the wife cannot get possession until the encumbrance has been removed. (c) A woman may release her dower right by signing with her husband a deed for the conveyance of the real estate. (d) A husband can will his wife a certain amount in place of her dower, but the wife can claim the dower instead if she prefers it. (e) The widow is usually entitled to administer the estate of her deceased husband. (f) Dower exists in growing crops and trees, and also in mines and quarries opened during the husband's lifetime. (g) The widow of a partner is entitled to her dower in partnership land after payment of all debts of the partnership. (h) A legal marriage is necessary to sustain a dower estate. An absolute divorce divests the wife of her dower if the divorce was granted to the husband by reason of the wife's misconduct. (i) Dower is assigned to the widow either by direction of the court or by agreement. (j) Dower may be barred by a marriage settlement or agreement made before marriage.

Drunkenness

1. Both the civil and criminal courts are frequently called upon to rule on cases in which one of the parties involved was intoxicated.

2. IN CIVIL CASES the courts have recognized cases in which intoxication was an excuse for repudiating a contract. The mental condition must be taken into consideration, especially where a man has become utterly incompetent or insane as a result of his intemperate habits. As we have seen before, such a man cannot make a contract. If one is visibly intoxicated, the contract could be declared void on the ground that the other party must have realized his condition. The element of fraud enters if one party deliberately induced the condition of the other. However, if the intoxicated party ratifies the agreement when sober, or fails to repudiate it, he would be legally bound by it.

3. IN CRIMINAL CASES the courts hold that one who voluntarily becomes intoxicated cannot claim his intoxication as an excuse for his criminal acts. Yet in all such cases the facts must show intent to commit the crime before there can be any conviction. This aspect has been brought up in many cases where the defendant was so drunk that he entered the wrong house, or carried off the property of others, or slandered the reputation of another.

4. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—(a) It is the duty of those who deal with an intoxicated person to take his condition into consideration. (b) A sober party must exercise a reasonable degree of care to avoid injury to a drunken individual. (c) A railroad company is also bound to take into account the helpless condition of its passenger, and to exercise reasonable care in keeping him out of danger. (d) Drunkenness is not a legal excuse for the commission of a crime, but sometimes it is evidence of the absence of malice.

Employer and Employee

1. EXPLANATION.—The term employee refers to a person who is hired by a contract of service to perform certain duties for another person called the employer.

2. KINDS OF CONTRACTS.—There are two types of general employment contracts. (a) Contracts to do some particular thing such as to buy and sell stocks or provisions, or collect accounts. (b) Contracts to do whatever the employer may direct. Farm hands, domestic servants, and clerks belong to this class. Such contracts are frequently verbal, or even only implied, rather than written.

3. COMPENSATION.—If no agreement has been made beforehand the employee is entitled to the wages usually paid for such service. If the employee leaves because of insufficient food, ill-treatment, or disabling sickness, he is entitled to pay for the time he worked.

4. DUTIES OF EMPLOYEE.—The employee is expected to perform faithfully the services for which he contracted for the entire term or period of service. In many cases, as in those of workers employed by the day or hour, this period of service may be very short. Courts frequently hold that if he leaves before expiration of time, he can claim no pay for the work done. Some judges have held, however, that even in this case the employee is entitled to pay for work done, less what the employer lost by necessity of paying higher wages to the employee's successor, or what he lost by the employee's failing to perform his contract. The employee is bound to take reasonable care of the property in his care, and is liable for any loss or injury to it when due to his negligence.

5. DISCHARGE.—An employee may be discharged at the end of his contract without any cause or previous notice. If he is discharged without good cause before the termination of his agreement, however, he is entitled to pay for the whole period, provided he has first made an earnest attempt to secure other employment in the same kind of work. If he gets work at lower wages, he is entitled to the difference. If his pay is equal to, or higher than, the former rate, he can not collect. If, however, the discharge is on account of incapacity, dishonesty, or misconduct, he is not entitled to any pay for the unexpired period. Frequently a person is hired for a month, or for a year, at the termination of which the work continues. In such cases the law presumes a new contract on the same terms.

6. LIABILITY OF EMPLOYER.—An employer's liability is of two kinds: (a) liability for the acts of his employees, and (b) liability for the injury or death of his employees.

7. LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF EMPLOYEE.—The employer is liable for the wrongful acts of his employee producing injury to others, provided the acts are done in the course of the ordinary employment. Thus a railroad company is liable to passengers for negligence of conductors and engineers.

8. WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.—Workmen's compensation acts have largely provided new remedies to take the place of the employee's right to sue his employer for injuries incurred in the course of his employment. Under these acts liability is generally imposed upon the employer without regard to the question as to whether or not the employer was at fault, and payments are made as insurance rather than as damages.

9. WHO IS ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION.—Any person employed by a contract of service who is under the control of the employer while at work at the machine or other device from which the injury arose is entitled to compensation. Previous physical condition is not considered in determining the amount.

10. WHO IS EXCLUDED.—The workmen's compensation acts differ in the several states. The Federal act protects persons employed by the United States and workmen engaged in interstate commerce. While it is difficult to give a general rule, the following are excluded from the benefits in most states, and in others the compensation is optional:

- a. Minors and apprentices.
- b. Farm laborers.
- c. Domestic servants.
- d. Casual employees.
- e. Independent contractors.
- f. Public officers.

11. DEPENDENTS.—The law also provides that the compensation be paid to dependents in case of death. Payments may be made only to actual dependents or to partial dependents in accordance with the degree of dependency. These include widows, children, step-children, illegitimate children, adopted children, or a dependent parent.

12. PAYMENTS.—The compensation acts provide for payments to the injured or his dependents in case of partial incapacity, permanent incapacity, or death, in amounts depending on the earning power of the injured at the time of the accident. Maximum and minimum amounts are usually specified.

13. INSURANCE.—The compensation laws are rigidly enforced, and to protect themselves, employers often take out liability insurance on the life and health of each employee. Then, when an accident occurs, the insurance company assumes all liability and relieves the employer of any claims which might be made under the workmen's compensation law. This method of limiting liability is provided for in the laws of all the states. The cost of such insurance is based on the size of the payroll and the nature of the employment. It ranges from a purely nominal figure for office work to a rather high rate for the more hazardous occupations.

14. VARIATIONS.—It is impossible in a brief space to attempt an explanation of the workmen's compensation laws in the different states. In some states deductions are made for contributory negligence, and in others awards are fixed for specific injuries, and in almost every state there can be found numerous variations.

15. SOURCES OF INFORMATION.—Copies of the compensation and liability statutes may be secured free of charge by writing to the Secretary of State of the state for which information is desired. He should be addressed at the state capital. Owing to the technical nature of the subject, however, it is always a good plan to ask an insurance adviser to explain the duties and obligations under the law.

Assignment of Wages

For a valuable consideration to me in hand paid by of the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I do hereby transfer, assign and set over to the said, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, all salary or wages, and claims for salary or wages, due or to become due from & Company, or from any other person or persons, firm, copartnership, company, corporation, organization or official by whom I am now or may hereafter become employed, at any time before the expiration of years from the date hereof.

I do hereby constitute irrevocably the said, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, my attorney, in my name to take all legal measures which may be proper or necessary for the complete recovery and employment of the claim hereby assigned, and I hereby authorize, empower and direct the said & Company, or any one by whom I may be employed as above, to pay the said demand and claim for wages or salary to the said, his executors, administrators or assigns, and hereby authorize and empower him or them to receipt for the same in my name.

Dated at this day, 19....

16. THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT.—In 1938 Congress enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act which set a minimum wage and maximum work week for employees engaged in interstate commerce or in the production of goods for commerce. Because of the broad interpretation by the Supreme Court of the Federal Government's constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce, this act has a widespread effect on employment.

There are also provisions in the Act restricting the employment of children. Children under eighteen years of age may not engage in hazardous occupations. Children under sixteen years may work for their parents in non-mining or non-manufacturing occupations. Children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen years may work at non-mining and non-manufacturing occupations after school hours and under conditions which will not affect their health or well-being.

The Fair Labor Standards Act is administered by the Wage and Hour Division of the United States Department of Labor at Washington, D.C. Many of the states have similar legislation affecting employment conditions among employees working in business wholly within the state.

17. THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT AND LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT.—The National Labor Relations Act, known as "The Wagner Act," has given employees the legal right to organize and bargain collectively with their employer without interference or coercion by the employer. The National Labor Relations Board enforces the Act and may, upon request of the employer or employees, hold an election to determine the union which shall act as bargaining agent. The Board may prohibit the employer from using unfair labor practices and may, after proper hearing, compel the reinstatement of a former employee discharged because of union activities. The Act has been amended by the Labor-Management Relations Act, known as the Taft-Hartley Act, which has added such things as prohibitions against unfair labor practices by employees. Some states have legislation patterned after these Acts.

18. THE NORRIS-LA GUARDIA ACT.—Another Federal act affecting employer-employee relationships is the Norris-La Guardia Act, which restricts the power of the Federal Courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes, although these restrictions have been eased somewhat by the Taft-Hartley Act, and prohibits them from enforcing "yellow dog" contracts. A "yellow dog" contract is one by which the employee, as a condition of his employment, agrees to withdraw from, or refrain from joining, a labor organization. Some states have similar laws affecting their own courts.

19. THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—The two phases of the Social Security Act that are most important to employer and employee are: (1) that which sets up a permanent system of old-age benefits, and (2) that which promotes the enactment of permanent unemployment insurance systems by the states. The old-age benefit system is administered by the Federal Government, and to support the plan, employer and employee pay a tax based on the size of the employee's wage, which the employer must remit to the Federal treasury. When the employee reaches 65, his monthly benefit payments begin and their amount is calculated with reference to the total tax he has paid over his years of work. These benefit provisions apply to all classes of persons within the Act, and should not be confused with old-age pensions to needy persons.

The Act attempts to induce the states to enact and administer unemployment insurance systems. The employer must pay a tax on his total payroll into the Federal treasury. If the state has an unemployment insurance act which meets the standards set up by Congress, the Federal Government will grant money to the state to help pay the cost of the insurance. The employer may also deduct up to 90 per cent of the Federal tax to pay the state unemployment insurance tax.

Other sections of the Social Security Act provide for Federal grants to the states for maternal and child welfare, for public health work, and for aid to the blind, the needy aged, and dependent children.

Equitable Remedies

1. DEFINITIONS.—A remedy is the legal means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury. Suppose A has purchased an automobile from B who refused to deliver it. In a court of equity A could compel B to deliver the car and this would be an equitable remedy. In a court of law A could recover damages for the loss he had sustained through B's refusal to deliver the automobile, and this would be a legal remedy.

2. THE COMMON REMEDY.—Relief in equity is often sought to compel a person to execute a contract which he has made. It quite frequently happens that a seller regrets his action after the contract has been made. The court of equity will compel him to deliver the property, provided that the law gives the purchaser no adequate remedy. When an article has a peculiar sentimental value, when it is of rare value like an heirloom, or when it is an article which cannot be easily purchased in the open market, the one party can compel the other to fulfill his contract. Ordinarily, the buyer of articles like cattle, lumber, dry goods, hardware, etc., has only the legal remedy to recover damages.

3. EQUITY WILL ENFORCE AGREEMENTS OR GRANT RELIEF:—

- a. When legal remedies (or damages) would be inadequate.
- b. When the seller of a business agrees not to enter into competition with the buyer.
- c. When an employee agrees not to disclose the trade secrets of his employer.
- d. When a tenant threatens or attempts to injure the real estate of the landlord.
- e. When an established patent has been infringed.
- f. In many other similar cases which would be too numerous to mention here.

4. EQUITY WILL NOT ENFORCE AGREEMENTS OR GRANT RELIEF:—

- a. When the law has an adequate remedy.
- b. When the goods contracted for can be readily purchased in the open market.
- c. To force a person to perform his contract to render personal services.
- d. When the contract in question is one where one party agrees to lend money to the other.
- e. When there is a contract to form a partnership.
- f. When such agreement would be in restraint of trade, would create a monopoly, or would be illegal for any other reason.

5. INJUNCTIONS.—Relief in equity is often brought about by the means of an injunction. An injunction is a restraining order issued by a court of equity on petition of the injured party. If the need is great the court will immediately issue a temporary injunction which orders the injuring party to do, or not to do, certain things, and fixes the time for a hearing. At this hearing, which is fixed within a reasonable time, and which is conducted like any ordinary trial, the court decides whether the injunction will be dissolved or whether it will be made permanent. Injunctions came into especial prominence through their use against labor unions during strikes. Injunctions were issued and upheld enjoining the members of labor unions from picketing, or otherwise preventing other workers from taking their places. Legislation has curbed the use of injunctions against labor groups although they are still legal in some cases.

Exemptions

1. DEFINITIONS.—A homestead is the abode or dwelling house of a family landowner and includes a specific amount of the adjacent land, varying in the different states. Exemption laws are defined as laws for the purpose of protecting those who are unable to pay their debts without causing distress to themselves and their families.

2. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—(a) The laws in some states provide that a person can waive his exemption rights in a promissory note or other written contract. (b) The laws of other states provide that exemptions cannot be waived. In nearly all the states an exemption in wages cannot be waived. A legal homestead is generally in one piece, but it may be divided by a road and in some states may consist of several distinct pieces. (c) A homestead is exempt from all debts except taxes, although in some states it is not exempt from pre-existing liens, fines for public offenses, and similar debts. (d) A person who is the head of a family, within the legal meaning of the term, is generally entitled to homestead exemption. This right survives to the husband or the wife in case of death, or to the surviving children until they come of age. (e) In divorce cases the wife ceases to be a member of the family and thus loses her homestead right unless reserved in the decree. (f) Desertion of the husband by the wife does not destroy his homestead right but does destroy hers. (g) A homestead may be sold or mortgaged regardless of the claims of creditors.

Guaranty

1. A guaranty is a written promise that a person will perform some duty or contract, or answer for the payment of some debt, in case of the failure of another person.

2. The person who guarantees the faithfulness of another is called the guarantor.

3. The guarantee or creditor is the person to whom the pledge is made.

4. A guaranty must be in writing.

5. A guaranty, to be binding, must be for a consideration.

6. A guaranty must be accepted in order for it to become a contract, and the guarantor must have notice of its acceptance within a reasonable time.

7. A guarantor, after paying the debt, can become the legally recognized creditor of the person for whom he was guarantor.

Husband and Wife

1. MARRIAGE is a civil contract. Marriage licenses are required by all the states, and many restrictions have been thrown around the issuing of such licenses within recent years. Marriages between whites and Negroes, between whites and Indians, and between whites and Chinese, are forbidden in various states. Unlike other contracts, marriage cannot be terminated by the consent of both parties.

2. CONTRACT TO MARRY IN THE FUTURE.—Mutual promise by a man and a woman to marry at some future day constitutes a valid contract in some states.

3. A MARRIAGE CONTRACT.—A marriage is a civil contract, and is entered into by the consent of the parties. If a man says to a woman, "Will you marry me?" or words to that effect, and she says "Yes," or words that imply an affirmative answer, it is, by law, an agreement or promise of marriage, and both parties are legally held to carry out in good faith the promise thus made.

4. BREACH OF PROMISE.—If either party refuses to carry out the contract, he or she is guilty of breach of promise, and in some states the other party may recover damages. It is not very often that the man sues the woman, though he has an equal right to do so if she fails to make good her promise. In several states, however, suits for breach of promise are now outlawed.

5. NECESSARY PROOF.—Generally in case of a lawsuit for breach of promise, there are no direct witnesses, as people usually become engaged without the presence of a third party. The engagement may be implied from the conduct of the party sued.

6. IMPLIED EVIDENCE.—In states where suit for breach of promise is recognized, a promise of marriage may be implied from circumstances such as constant visits, presents, or open declaration of the parties, their reception by the parents or friends as an engaged couple, without any objections from the party being sued.

7. EXCUSES FOR BREAKING THE PROMISE.—A refusal to marry may be justified on the ground of the bad character or conduct of the other party; poor health of either party is sometimes a good excuse, but not generally. If the woman were a widow, or a divorcee, and concealed this fact from the man, this justifies a refusal on his part to marry.

8. TIME OF MARRIAGE.—When a man promises to marry a woman without stating any special time, the law may hold him guilty of breach of promise unless he is ready to fulfill his engagement within a reasonable time; five years was held in one instance to be an unreasonable time.

9. WHEN A PROMISE IS NOT BINDING.—If either party is underage, he or she is not bound by promise to marry and the law will excuse the party underage.

10. SEDUCTION.—Seduction of a woman under promise of marriage and subsequent refusal on the man's part to marry, subjects him to damages in a civil action and often to criminal liability as well.

11. SEPARATION.—The law allows agreements between husband and wife in which they agree to live separately. This does not in any way abolish her rights in his estate unless the contract so specifies.

12. DIVORCE.—Divorces are of two kinds: namely, (a) absolute divorces, and (b) judicial separation, generally known as separate maintenance. The word as now commonly used has the former meaning. In the case of an absolute divorce the marriage is ended and the parties become single. A judicial separation is a limited divorce in which the court gives one party the right to live separately from the other. The decree of divorce usually makes provision for the payment of alimony, for the custody and support of the children, if there are any, and for the settlement of property rights between the parties. The divorce laws of the several states vary, although most states recognize and respect the laws of the other states. It is possible, however, to be legally married in one state but considered an adulterer in another; for children to be regarded as legitimate in one state and illegitimate in another.

13. AUTHORITY OF WIFE LIVING APART

FROM HUSBAND TO BIND HIM.—Whether or not the person who supplies a wife with necessities has knowledge at the time of her husband's provision for her support, the presumption of a wife's authority to pledge her husband's credit is negatived by the fact of their living apart, and the tradesman who supplies her under such circumstances upon the credit of her husband, and without his express sanction or approval, does so at his own peril. In order to charge her husband with the cost of supplies furnished her he must show that they were not only of the kind usually regarded as "necessaries," but that in consequence of the inadequacy of the husband's provision, they were actually required for the wife's proper support, commensurate with his means and her station in the community.

14. PROPERTY RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.—One of the marked evidences of the growth of true civilization in the United States is the enactment by nearly all the states of legislative provisions for the benefit of married women. These laws vary greatly in the different states, and there are frequent changes, but all tend toward the releasing of woman from her former condition of absolute dependence upon her husband. By the old common law a married woman had few rights. She was subject to the authority of her husband, and he could rule over her. This condition has now been changed, however, and the rights of married women are recognized by every court. All property owned by the wife before marriage, or received after marriage and held as her separate property, can be sold and transferred without the consent of her husband except his rights of dower or curtesy in her real estate. If a husband fails to make provision for the support of his wife, the law will compel him to furnish her proper support if he has sufficient means.

15. GENERAL PRINCIPLES REGARDING THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT.—(a) There must be a serious agreement or mutual assent of both parties. (b) A marriage may be declared void because of fraud, incompetence of one of the parties, or the fact that one of the parties is underage. (c) The minimum age at which marriage can legally be contracted varies from state to state. With consent of parents or guardians, the minimum age in several states is 18 for men and 16 for women; in states under common law the ages are 14 and 12, respectively. Without such consent, the minimum age is frequently 21 for men and 18 for women, although there are numerous exceptions. (d) A marriage is not void simply because it has been improperly performed or licensed, but the officials responsible are liable. (e) At common law a wife is solely responsible for her crimes unless they were committed in her husband's presence, in which case coercion on the part of the husband is presumed. In many states this law has been changed so that the husband is responsible only when he participated in the crime, unless coercion is proved. (f) A married man can sue for the alienation of his wife's affections. In some states the wife has a similar right. Suits for alienation of affections are now prohibited by the laws of a number of states. (g) Either husband or wife may act as the agent for the other party. (h) The husband is not responsible for the debts or wrongs of his wife unless, of course, the debts are necessary for the support of the family. (i) The husband must provide a home, and support and protect his wife and children. His duty to protect his family carries with it all the rights of "self defense." (j) He must maintain law and order in his household, and may use force in preventing a member of his family from committing a crime. (k) A wife is required to care for the house and family. She cannot be forced to go into business or enter any gainful occupation. (l) The husband must support his wife, and she can pledge his credit for articles necessary to sustain life and maintain her social position.

Innkeeper

1. DEFINITION.—An innkeeper is one who keeps a public house for the reception and entertainment of travelers.

2. GAINING ADMISSION TO AN INN OR HOTEL.—An innkeeper is required to accommodate all comers with the following exceptions which vary in different states:

- (a) He may exclude anyone if he has no accommodations.
- (b) He may exclude those who do not come at a suitable time or in a proper manner.
- (c) He must exclude certain persons such as criminals and thieves.
- (d) He may refuse admission to those he believes would disturb the peace and safety of his guests.
- (e) He can expel any guest who does disturb the peace and safety of his other guests.

If he refuses to provide reasonable and proper accommodations, he is liable. He need not provide any particular room. If he operates a garage or stable in connection with the inn, he is under the same obligation to receive and care for the automobiles or horses of his guests.

3. THE INNKEEPER'S LIABILITY.—The law fixes the liability and responsibility of an innkeeper:

- (a) An innkeeper is responsible for the loss or damage to a guest's baggage committed to his care unless such loss is caused by an act of God, a public enemy, or neglect or fault of the owner of the baggage.

- (b) In most states innkeepers are relieved from liability for loss by fire unless the fire is caused by the negligence of the innkeeper or his servants.
- (c) An innkeeper is liable for goods of a guest if they were stolen by the innkeeper's servants, by another guest, or by an outsider. However, he is not liable if the loss was due to the negligence of the owner.
- (d) The innkeeper is bound to secure honest and trustworthy employees.
- (e) If two guests occupy the same room, the innkeeper can be held responsible if a theft is committed by one against the other.

4. LIENS.—An innkeeper has a lien on a guest's baggage or other property left in his care, to secure the payment for the accommodations.

5. REGULATIONS.—An innkeeper may make regulations for the observance of his guests in order to protect their property. Thus he may limit his liability somewhat by notifying the guests that he is not responsible for the loss of valuable articles unless they are deposited with him. Such regulations will bind the guest if brought to his notice.

6. LODGING AND BOARDING HOUSES.—The keepers of lodging or boarding houses do not come under the same head as innkeepers as far as the law is concerned. They are not required to accommodate all who may apply. They are not liable for refusing to accommodate all comers.

Insurance

A. FIRE INSURANCE

1. DEFINITION.—Fire insurance is indemnity against loss by fire. It is now generally furnished by large stock companies or by mutual companies.

2. MUTUAL COMPANIES are generally established by statute and provide for the payment of losses by pro rata assessment upon the policy-holders, who constitute the stockholders, and who manage the affairs of the company. Some of these mutual companies require a small premium paid in advance, which, unless unusual losses occur, is enough to pay all the losses for the year. Others simply require a small fee to pay for the expense of making the survey and issuing the policy. All of them, however, in case of loss, make an assessment pro rata upon the policy-holders to pay the same.

3. STOCK INSURANCE COMPANIES.—The insurance business of private corporations is carried on for profit.

4. UNDERWRITERS' ASSOCIATIONS.—The stock fire insurance companies all submit complete underwriting and loss figures to the National Board of Underwriters, which, in addition to acting as a clearing house and as statisticians for such information, also supervises common services to the public such as fire protection, information, and grading. There are also local agents' boards and state associations operating to promote uniformity of service and contract. Fire insurance rates are usually established by rating bureaus which are administered and paid for by a majority of companies doing business in the state or locality. Rates are usually adhered to by all agents either by common agreement or as directed by state law. Specific rates are published for mercantile houses, warehouses, business and manufacturing buildings. Rates by classes are used for dwellings, small apartment houses, farms, and similar property.

5. THE PURPOSE OF FIRE INSURANCE.—Fire insurance is a means of distributing the cost of damages caused by fire. A fund is supplied by the payment of premiums, from which the insurance company agrees to pay the loss in case of fire.

6. CLASSIFICATION.—In order that each person thus protected from loss may contribute the proper amount to this fund, a system of classification has been worked out, whereby the premium rate has been established. This classification is based on the probability of fire. The National Board of Fire Underwriters, having the reports of the various insurance companies, knows the probable number of fires and the value of the property involved. Statistics show that a certain percentage of residences, barns, schools, merchandise, etc., will be burned each year. Also that buildings of one type of construction are more likely to burn than those of some other type of construction. Population, water pressure, fire department, building contents, and many other elements are taken into consideration by the rating bureau in determining the rate each person must pay for insurance.

7. REDUCING THE RATE.—When you pay your premium, you can judge, by the rate you pay, what the experience of the insurance companies has been with regard to similar property, with similar conditions. If the rate is high, find out just what factors make it high. Then you may be able to make such changes or take such precautions that your rate will be reduced.

8. WHO HAS AN INSURABLE INTEREST.—In order to be indemnified against loss the insured must have an interest in the property or goods insured, both at the time the insurance is issued and at the time of the loss. Thus the following may be insured:

- a. A bailee (one who receives goods of another to hold).
- b. A consignee (one to whom property is consigned or shipped).
- c. A mortgagee (one who holds a mortgage on real or personal property).
- d. An assignee (one to whom property is assigned).
- e. A warehouseman.
- f. An executor or an administrator.
- g. A landlord.
- h. A tenant.
- i. The holder of a lien on property.
- j. An agent who has the custody or care of the principal's property.

All these as well as many others, have what is called an insurable interest. If all insurable interests in a property are not noted on the policy at the time of loss, the company is not liable to the party having an interest which is not so noted.

9. THE INSURANCE POLICY IS A CONTRACT between the insurance company and the insured, by which the first party insures the property of the second party against loss by fire. The consideration, or premium, is usually paid when the policy is issued, although it may be charged on account or paid by check or note. The contract becomes binding and valid when the policy is properly executed. Actual delivery of the policy to the insured is not necessary. Thus if a loss occurs after the duly executed policy is in the hands of the insurance company's agent, but before it has been delivered to the insured, the company must pay the loss. A preliminary contract is sometimes made, in which case the risk begins immediately upon the signing, even though such contract be dated several days before the policy is actually issued. Most local agents have authority to protect an applicant for insurance against loss for a period of 5 to 30 days preceding acceptance of the risk by the company.

10. CANCELLATION.—A fire insurance contract, like any other contract, may be canceled by mutual agreement, but unless otherwise stated in the policy the company cannot cancel the contract without the consent of the policyholder.

11. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—

- a. The property insured, and the terms of the contract, must be clearly defined.
- b. If the written part of the policy contradicts the printed sections, the written part will hold.
- c. Clerical or typographical errors may usually be corrected when discovered.
- d. The insurance on the building covers those things which have become a part of it, but does not include fixtures or surrounding sheds or buildings.

- e. Misrepresentation or fraud on the part of the insured renders the insurance policy null and void.
- f. If a policyholder secures additional fire insurance on his property without the consent of the insurance company, his former policy becomes void. Most policies today, however, consent to the writing of additional insurance on the property by other companies and in case of loss the liability is pro-rated.
- g. In addition to the actual fire loss most policies cover damage by water used to put out the fire, damage to goods while being removed to avoid fire, and damage from an explosion caused by fire.
- h. An insurance company is not responsible for goods stolen while they are being removed during a fire.
- i. An ordinary policy of insurance does not usually insure against lightning, but lightning clauses will be attached to nearly all policies if requested at the time of issue.
- j. The insurance company is not relieved from liability by the carelessness of the policyholder, yet the insured is bound to take reasonable care to prevent fire.
- k. In a total loss the insurance company is liable for the full value of the property, provided that this value does not exceed the amount of the insurance. In a partial loss the company is liable only for the actual loss.
- l. In an open policy the amount of the insurer's liability is not fixed until after the loss. In a valued policy the maximum liability for a total loss is fixed.
- m. In order to calculate the approximate loss on merchandise in case of fire, the value of the following items should be ascertained: the most recent inventory; invoices for goods bought subsequent to that inventory; freight and dray bills on same; credit memorandums for merchandise returned; production department payrolls; appreciation in value of goods since purchase. These items should be added together and from their sum should be subtracted the sum of the following items: outgoing charges, representing goods sold since the last inventory; depreciation in value of goods since purchase; salvage, or market value of goods not destroyed. The remainder gives the approximate value of goods destroyed, for which insurance compensation can be obtained.

B. LIFE INSURANCE

12. DEFINITION.—Life insurance is a contract whereby the insurer agrees, on the payment of a fixed premium, to pay a certain sum of money to the insured when he reaches a certain age, or to his beneficiaries at his death. Thus it is possible for a man to insure his productive ability for the amount of money it would be worth to him if he were to survive his expected time. (See table of expectancy below.)

AMERICAN EXPERIENCE TABLE OF MORTALITY

14. APPLICATIONS.—Nearly all companies require applications for life insurance to be in writing, and they are usually accompanied by the report of a medical examination made by the local medical examiner of the company. These applications are forwarded to the home office, and if they pass the head medical examiner, the policy is issued to the insured and the application is made a part of the policy. Any false statement contained therein which is material to the risk will vitiate the policy, and applicants for insurance should be careful to see that all questions are fully and truthfully answered. The moral hazard involved is also carefully considered by the insuring company. Most life insurance policies provide that the insurance shall not be in force until the first premium is paid, and most policies are now incontestable after the payment of a certain number of premiums. By the laws of all states, in case default is made in the payment of premium after a certain number of full premiums have been paid, the policyholder may have the option to select any one of the following nonforfeiture provisions:

- a. Cash surrender value.
- b. Reduced paid-up insurance.
- c. Term insurance for the full face amount of the policy.

15. THE POLICY.—The usual clauses contained in life insurance policies are these: That the insurance ceases unless the premiums are promptly paid; that the company shall be exempt if, within two years after the issuance of the policy, the insured commits suicide whether sane or insane, or if death shall come by the hands of justice for a violation of law; that agents are not authorized to alter or discharge any part of the contract; that assignments of the policy shall not take effect until notice thereof shall be received by the company at its home office; that after two years the policy will be incontestable except for fraud or non-payment of premium. All policies also provide for a 30 or 31 day period of grace after the due date for payment of premiums.

16. INSURABLE INTEREST.—In order for an insurance policy to be valid the person taking out the policy must have an insurable interest in the subject matter of the insurance, that is, one who would suffer loss, financial or otherwise, on the happening of the event insured against. However, such a person may name any beneficiary, although companies hesitate to approve applications for life insurance where the named beneficiary has no such interest. The relationship of uncle or aunt and nephew or niece, or that of cousins is generally not sufficient unless other circumstances show an insurable interest.

17. KINDS OF POLICIES.—There are many kinds of life insurance policies. Among the more common are the following:

- a. Ordinary Life Policy in which premiums are paid during life and in which the face value of the policy is payable at death. This is the simplest and lowest-premium form of life insurance.
- b. Limited Payment Plan.—The face value of the policy is payable only at death, and premiums are payable only for a limited period of years, or until death if it occurs within that period.
- c. Endowment Policy.—The insurance company agrees to pay a fixed sum at the end of a fixed term of years, or at death, if it occurs before the expiration of the term, provided a fixed premium is paid during the entire term.
- d. Convertible Term Policy insures against death for a limited term of years, and may be converted into any other form of insurance, without medical examination, within a stated period.
- e. Income Agreements may be issued on any of the other plans, with a provision that the face value of the policy is to be paid in monthly installments instead of in a lump sum.

18. GENERAL PRINCIPLES:

- a. Unless forbidden by statute, a life insurance policy may be assigned to one having an insurable interest, or to a person without such an interest, provided that the assignment is made in good faith. An assignment is often made for the benefit of creditors, or as security for the payment of a debt.
- b. A contract for insurance does not take effect until it has been approved by the company, and the insured has paid the first premium.
- c. A general agent can bind his principal even against the express terms of the policy provided that the insured was not negligent in failing to advise himself concerning the terms.
- d. A life insurance contract may be void on account of a mistake in issuing it, on account of violation of statute, on account of fraud by either party, or if the policy is contrary to public policy.
- e. Words or figures written or printed on the margin or on the back of the policy, or on a slip attached to the policy, must be considered as an integral part of the agreement.
- f. The payment of premiums to an agent will bind the company, unless the insured has received notice to the contrary.
- g. A policy may be canceled by mutual agreement and the insured is then entitled to the surrender value of the policy or any other nonforfeiture option contained therein.

C. OTHER FORMS OF INSURANCE

19. ACCIDENT INSURANCE may be secured against all kinds of accidents. Upon payment of small premiums, policies may be had insuring against accident from one day to ten years, for any reasonable amount. The rates generally depend upon the occupation of the insured.

20. MARINE INSURANCE.—Marine insurance is governed largely by the same rules that control fire insurance. This form of insurance may include all casualties resulting from unusual or violent actions of the elements, foundering at sea, grounding, collision, fire, perils of war, rests and restraints, jettison, and any other perils, losses, or misfortunes of the sea.

21. FRATERNAL INSURANCE.—This is one of the oldest forms of insurance, originating with the ancient secret societies. Originally the societies assumed an obligation to pay sick and death benefits to their members. Today there are numerous societies that issue standard life insurance policies, with a fixed premium rate and a limited amount of insurance payable at death.

22. INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE.—Many large business organizations issue this form of insurance for the benefit of their employees. The amounts are usually small and the weekly or monthly payments are deducted from the wages of the insured.

23. OTHER KINDS OF INSURANCE include employers' liability, public liability, tornado, explosion, health, hospital, automobile, burglary, fraud, insolvency, and loss through bad debts. Almost every kind of risk imaginable may be covered by insurance.

Assignment of Policy of Insurance

Know all men by these presents, that I, of the village of, for and in consideration of, to me in hand paid by of the same place, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have sold, assigned, transferred, and set over, and by these presents do sell, assign, transfer, and set over, unto the said the policy of insurance known as policy No. of the Insurance Company, and all sum and sums of money, interest, benefit, and advantage whatsoever, now due, or hereafter to arise, or to be had or made by virtue thereof, to have and to hold the same unto the said and his assigns forever.

In witness whereof, I have hereto affixed my hand this 20th day of June, 19. (Name)

International Law

1. DEFINITIONS.—International law is the body of rules designed to govern the conduct of nations toward one another. It includes customs and usages that have grown up among nations and have become generally accepted by them; and the enactments contained in treaties and conventions. International law is intended to do for nations what the domestic law does for individuals.

2. TREATIES.—Much international law is embodied in treaties. A treaty is an agreement between two or more nations to adjust differences or to govern future conduct. Treaties are sometimes made for a limited period of years, but a treaty made by one administration is binding upon the following administration.

3. REPRESENTATIVES.—Ambassadors are the authorized diplomatic representatives of nations. They are immune from civil or criminal liability, but may be tried for crime by their home governments. A consul is a commercial representative sent by one nation to another to aid in the establishment and maintenance of trade relations between the nations, and to look after the interests of the citizens or subjects of his country. He is personally liable for his actions.

4. GENERAL PRINCIPLES. There are certain well established principles of international law, which provide as follows:

a. One nation cannot interfere with the internal affairs of another.

b. Crimes committed on the high seas are under the jurisdiction of the nation under whose flag the ship sails.

c. The property of alien enemies is subject to confiscation.

d. A neutral country must be fair and impartial in its relations with warring nations.

e. It is a violation of international law for a warring nation to fight on, or cross the territory of, a neutral power.

f. It is also a violation of international law to carry the necessary finished goods or materials of warfare to a combatant nation.

g. A fugitive criminal cannot be brought back from another nation unless the terms of the treaty between the two nations so provide.

h. Confiscation is the penalty for attempting to violate a blockade in time of war.

5. PASSPORTS.—A passport is a document granted by the government to a citizen, enabling him to travel to other countries. (See PASSPORTS.)

Lease

1. DEFINITIONS.—The phrase landlord and tenant is used to denote the relationship which exists by virtue of a contract expressed or implied between two or more persons for the possession or occupancy of lands or tenements either for a definite period or at will. The landlord or lessor is the person who lets the land or premises. The tenant or lessee is the one who occupies the land or premises. The lease is the contract between the two.

2. LEASES SHOULD BE IN WRITING.—Leases which are to run for more than a year or which are not to be performed within a year must be in writing, or they are invalid. Leases for a year or less and which can be performed within a year are valid even if not in writing. To avoid misunderstandings, disputes, and possible litigation it is always best, however, that the lease be in writing and signed by both parties, regardless of the length of the term.

3. LEASES FOR LIFE are those which are terminated by death either of the lessee or of some other person living at the date of the lease. Unless such leases contain covenants to the contrary, the life tenant or the lessee is required to pay all taxes on the premises and keep the same in repair.

4. LEASES FOR YEARS.—The lessor, unless it is otherwise expressly provided in the lease, is under obligation to see that his tenant's possession is not disturbed by any title paramount to the landlord's. He is not required to make repairs unless he agrees to do so in the lease, nor is there an implied contract on his part that the premises are fit for the purpose for which they are let. He must pay all the taxes regularly levied and assessed against said premises and keep the buildings on said premises insured at his own expense if he desires to carry insurance.

5. IMPLIED AGREEMENT BY TENANT.—Where there is no agreement to the contrary, the tenant is bound to take possession of the premises, take ordinary care of the same, keep them in a tenantable condition, and make repairs made necessary by his negligence, but he need not make repairs made necessary by ordinary wear and tear or inevitable accident.

If the premises leased be a farm, he is also required to cultivate the same in the manner required of good husbandry. He must not commit waste, alter buildings or fences, and must surrender up the premises at the end of his term in as good condition as when entered upon originally, ordinary wear and tear excepted. He is not required to pay taxes or keep buildings insured, but must pay the stipulated rent at the time it becomes due by the terms of his lease. If no time is specified in his lease, then the rent is due at the end of the term. He may sublet the premises or assign the lease unless it contains provisions to the contrary.

If he places permanent improvements upon the premises which are so attached to the buildings or land that they cannot be removed without injury to the buildings or land, he has no right to remove the same unless his lease so provides. He may remove trade fixtures, provided they are removed from the premises before the expiration of his lease.

6. COMMON PROVISIONS OF A LEASE.—Most leases provide for the yielding up of the possession of the premises at the end of the term without notice, in as good condition as when they were entered upon by the lessee, loss by fire, inevitable accident, and ordinary wear excepted. There is frequently a provision against subletting or assigning the lease, and a clause stating that in case of non-payment of rent, or failure to perform any of the covenants of the lease, the lessor shall have the right to terminate the lease and recover possession of the premises.

Farm leases usually provide, in addition to the stipulations mentioned above, that the tenant shall keep the fruit and ornamental trees, vines, and shrubbery free from injury by stock, plowing, or otherwise; that the lessee will draw out the manure and spread it on the premises; that no straw shall be sold or removed from the premises during the term or at its termination; that the tenant will keep the buildings and fences in repair, the landlord to furnish necessary material; that the landlord may do fall plowing on the stubble ground after the grain has been removed therefrom, and that he may enter for the purpose of making repairs, viewing the premises, and sowing timothy seed. Sometimes the landlord covenants to make all new fences, to furnish water, and to carry out other provisions which may be inserted in the lease.

7. TERMINATION OF LEASE.—Under the strict rules of the common law the landlord might terminate the lease for non-payment of rent, but in order to do so it was necessary for him to go upon the premises and make a demand for the exact amount of rent due upon the very day that the rent came due, and a failure to do this waived the right to obtain forfeiture. This strict rule of the common law has been modified in nearly all the states so that it is no longer necessary to make a demand for the rent on the day the rent comes due. Instead of this, most of the states provide that before the landlord shall declare a forfeiture, a demand in writing, for the amount of rent due, shall be served upon the tenant, and he be notified that in case he fails to pay the rent within a fixed time, generally five or ten days, the landlord will elect to terminate his lease. In such cases the tenant has until the end of the last day fixed in the notice to pay the rent and prevent the forfeiture. The statutes of the various states also provide that in case of breaches of other agreements contained in the lease, notice of such breaches and intention of the landlord to terminate the lease shall be served upon the tenant.

8. TERMINATION OF TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR AND MONTH TO MONTH.—Where a

tenant has a lease for a year, and at the end of his term remains in possession of the property without a new agreement, the law construes this to be a leasing from year to year, and such tenancy at common law could be terminated only by either party's giving the other six months' notice prior to the end of any year. This notice has been changed by a statute in Illinois to sixty days prior to the end of any year, and a shorter time has been fixed in other states. A tenant who has a lease on property for one or more months and who remains on the property after the termination of his lease, is termed a tenant from month to month, and such tenancy can be terminated only by either party giving the other party thirty days' notice. A tenancy from month to month may also be created by agreement. A tenancy at will is one which can be terminated at any time by either party.

9. DEMAND.—It is a general rule, subject to few exceptions, that in order to get possession of property where the original occupancy by the tenant was lawful, either a notice to quit or a demand for possession is necessary on the part of the owner before commencing proceedings to get possession.

10. SECURING POSSESSION.—When a lease has been terminated either by its term or by notice, and the landlord is entitled to possession, the most common method of recovering possession is to commence an action of forcible entry and detainer against the tenant for the possession of the premises. This may be done by filing a complaint and having a summons issued. If the possession of the tenant was lawful at the time of its beginning, the landlord has no right to dispossess him forcibly, and if he does so, it is at his peril. Taking possession by force may subject the landlord to an action for damages. Leases sometimes contain clauses stating that where a forfeiture has taken place the landlord shall have the right to take possession of the premises leased, by force if necessary. Such provisions, however, cannot be enforced and do not justify the landlord in using force. The only legal course for the landlord is to begin an action, obtain a judgment for possession, and have the constable or sheriff put him in legal possession.

11. DISTRESS FOR RENT.—An effective method of collecting rent is by distress warrant. This is a warrant issued by the landlord to some third person, authorizing and empowering such third person to levy said warrant upon any personal property of the tenant for the satisfaction of the rent. A very important advantage of this remedy is that it enables the landlord to seize the personal property of the tenant without delay. This process is of very ancient origin. As used here the term personal property means property other than real estate. The statutes of most of the states provide for this remedy, and the mode of procedure is generally prescribed by the statute. In general, it is the duty of the officer, as soon as the levy is made, to file with a justice of the peace or with the clerk of the court an inventory of the property levied upon, together with a copy of his warrant, and usually a summons is issued.

12. TIME OF LEVY.—Under the common law the tenant had all of the day on which the rent came due to make payment, and a distress warrant could not be levied until the day after the rent came due. In some states, however, in case the tenant sells or attempts to dispose of the crop grown upon the premises, thereby endangering the landlord's lien for his rent, a distress warrant may be levied before the rent comes due. The person making the levy should be careful not to levy on more property than is necessary in order to satisfy the rent due, otherwise he may be liable to the tenant for making an excessive levy.

13. LANDLORD'S LIEN.—Under the common law the landlord had no lien upon the property of the tenant until a distress warrant was actually levied upon the property of the tenant. Most of the states, however, now provide that the landlord shall have a lien upon all the crops grown upon the leased premises until the rent for the year in which said crop was grown has been paid, and this lien is ahead of all other liens, even though another legal claim may have been levied upon such crops. The landlord's lien is paramount until the rent is satisfied. The usual method of enforcing the lien of the landlord is by distress warrant.

THE COURTS HAVE HELD:—

(a) Unless the tenant makes a specific agreement relieving himself, he is liable for the rent of the building on the land leased, after the building has burned down, just as if he were still occupying it.

(b) When the terms of a lease are in doubt, the courts endeavor to ascertain the intention of the parties from the lease itself and from the circumstances under which it was made.

(c) The term of a lease expiring on a specified day continues through the whole of that day.

(d) When the tenant continues to occupy the premises without the consent of the landlord after the expiration of the lease, the landlord may treat him either as a trespasser or as a tenant for another term.

(e) A lease may be made to take effect at some future date.

(f) A lease must clearly define the property, but no special form or wording is necessary.

(g) Valid leases may be made by minors, married women, corporations, executors, administrators, or trustees, subject to certain restrictions. However, there is always uncertainty in a contract with a minor.

(h) A lease for an unlawful purpose is generally held to be void.

(i) As in other contracts, if the printed and the written parts of a lease do not agree, the written part will usually hold.

(j) The lease of a private house is not a warranty that it is fit to be occupied.

(k) When a landlord agrees to keep the building in repair and fails to do so, the tenant's remedy is to sue for damages. He may not continue to occupy the premises and refuse to pay rent.

(l) When a tenant is evicted he is excused from the payment of rent for any time after his eviction. Any act by the landlord which renders the property unfit for, or impossible of, occupancy is an eviction.

(m) If land is rented on shares the relation of landlord and tenant usually exists even if the rent is to be paid in produce instead of cash.

(n) The landlord is liable for injuries caused by defective stairways, open elevator shafts, or other dangerous conditions which exist in the parts of a rented building which are under his control.

Short Form of Lease

THIS INDENTURE, made this sixth day of April, 19 . . . , between JOHN PARKS, as lessor, and J. B. MOULTON, as lessee, WITNESSETH: That the lessor has this day leased to the lessee the premises known as number 142 Archer Street, in the City of Chicago and State of Illinois, to be occupied by the lessee as a residence (or insert any other purpose for which building is leased) only, for and during the term commencing on the first day of May, 19 . . . , and ending on the thirtieth day of April, 19 . . . , upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth; and in consideration of said demise and the covenants and agreements hereinafter set forth, it is covenanted and agreed as follows:

FIRST.—The lessee shall pay to the lessor at the office of the lessor as rent for said leased premises for said term the sum of Six Hundred Dollars ($600.00) payable in advance in equal monthly installments upon the first day of each and every month during the term hereof.

SECOND.—The lessee has examined said premises prior to and as a condition precedent to his acceptance and the execution hereof and is satisfied with the physical condition thereof, and the lessee's taking possession thereof shall be conclusive evidence of the lessee's receipt thereof in good order and repair, except as otherwise specified herein, and the lessee agrees to keep said premises and the appurtenances thereto in a clean, slightly, and healthy condition and in good repair, and to yield back said premises to the lessor upon the termination of this lease, whether such termination shall occur by expiration of the term hereof or in any other manner whatever, in the same condition of cleanliness, sightliness and repair as at the date of the execution hereof, loss by fire or other casualty, and ordinary wear and tear excepted.

THIRD.—The lessee agrees to pay the water tax charged against said premises when due.

FOURTH.—The lessee agrees to allow the lessor free access to the leased premises for the purpose of examining or exhibiting the same, or making any needful repairs or alterations of said premises which the lessor may see fit to make: also to allow to be placed upon said premises at all times during the term hereof "For Sale" and "To Rent" signs and not to interfere with the same.

FIFTH.—The lessee agrees not to assign this lease, nor sublet said leased premises, or any part thereof, without the written consent of the lessor endorsed hereon.

SIXTH.—In case said leased premises shall be vacated during said term the lessor may take immediate possession thereof for the remainder of the term and in his discretion relet the same and apply the proceeds upon this lease, the lessee to remain liable for the unpaid balance of the rent.

SEVENTH.—The failure of the lessee to perform the foregoing covenants, or any of them, shall constitute a forfeiture of all of the lessee's rights under this lease and the further occupancy by the lessee of said leased premises after such forfeiture shall be deemed and taken as a forcible detainer of such premises by the lessee, and the lessor may, without notice, re-enter and take possession thereof, with or without force, and with or without legal process, evict and dispossess the lessee from and of said leased premises.

EIGHTH.—The foregoing covenants, and the terms and conditions of this lease, shall inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the respective heirs, devisees, personal representatives, successors, and assigns of the parties hereto, except as herein otherwise provided.

Witness the hands and seals of the parties hereto, the day and the year first above written.

Legal Remedies

1. DEFINITION.—As we have already seen, a remedy is a legal means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury. For example, suppose A and B enter into a binding contract for the purchase and sale of land. If A, the seller, refuses to live up to his contract, B can sue A for the damages he sustained through A's refusal to sell the land. This would be a legal remedy. In a court of equity B could compel A to sell him the land and that would be an equitable remedy.

2. STEPS NECESSARY TO SECURE A LEGAL REMEDY.—When one party to a contract has a legal cause of action against the other, he brings suit as follows:

- (a) B files a complaint against A, stating the agreement and giving the facts of A's failure to fulfill his contract, and the loss resulting to B from such violation.

- (b) A is summoned to appear in court to answer the charge and the court is asked to render judgment against A for the damage resulting from A's refusal to fulfill the contract, and also for the costs.
- (c) The case is then tried, and if judgment is rendered against A, the court empowers the sheriff to levy on any property A may have above statutory exemptions, sell it, and turn the proceeds over to B for the damages awarded, returning any surplus to A.

3. VARIOUS KINDS OF ACTIONS.—The common-law forms of action have been abolished in most states, but similar actions are allowed by the codes which have supplanted the common-law forms of action. The following is a list of actions, for the most part designated and defined as they were at common law:

- (a) Complaint is the general name used in many states for the pleading used to institute any legal action.
- (b) Ejectment is a form of action to determine the title to land and right of possession.
- (c) Habeas Corpus is an action or writ used to recover a person's liberty from illegal restraint.
- (d) Libel is an action brought to collect damages for any malicious writing tending to injure the business or reputation of the plaintiff.
- (e) Mandamus is an action to compel someone to do some specific thing pertaining to his office or duty.
- (f) Quo warranto is a writ used to recover an office or a franchise from the person or corporation in possession of it.
- (g) Replevin is a form of action for the recovery of the possession of specific personal property.
- (h) Slander is an action to collect damages for malicious defamation by word of mouth.
- (i) Tort is an action to recover damages for a private or civil wrong or injury arising independent of any contract.

License

1. DEFINITIONS.—A license is a right or permission granted by competent authority to a person, giving him the right to do something which otherwise he would not have the right to do. The licensor is the one who grants the license. The licensee is the one to whom the license is issued.

2. KINDS OF LICENSES.—Licenses are of almost infinite variety and are issued not only by the federal government, but by states, counties, cities, towns, and villages. They may be issued to manufacturers or dealers in certain articles, such as tobacco or liquor, to proprietors of amusement places, peddlers, transportation companies, chauffeurs, automobile owners, itinerant merchants, and cab drivers. Such licenses are issued under what is known as the police power of the state.

3. ILLEGAL LICENSES.—Cities sometimes require the payment of a local license by salesmen or canvassers who are taking orders for goods to be shipped from another state at some future time. The supreme court has held such a license requirement as in restraint of interstate commerce, and therefore, illegal.

4. MARRIAGE LICENSES.—All states require a marriage license. The person who performs the ceremony is required by law to note the fact of the marriage on the face of the license, and to return it to the county recorder for record.

Lien

1. A LIEN is a legal claim upon property for the payment of a debt. It is the right to hold possession of property until some claim against the owner has been satisfied.

2. POSSESSION is always necessary to create a lien, except in case of mortgages and judgments and statutory liens such as mechanic's liens. The lien simply permits the holding of the property in question until the debt is satisfied. The property cannot be sold without the consent of the owner, except by order of the court.

3. LAW.—The existence of a lien does not prevent the party entitled to it from collecting the debt or claim by taking it into court.

4. PARTIES ENTITLED TO LIENS.—Warehousemen, carpenters, tailors, dyers, millers, printers, etc., or any persons who perform labor or advance money on property or goods of another, usually have a lien on that property or those goods until all charges are paid.

5. HOTEL KEEPERS have a lien on the baggage of the guests whom they have accommodated.

6. COMMON CARRIERS have a lien on goods carried for transportation charges.

7. AGENTS have a lien on goods of their principals for money advanced.

8. HOW TO HOLD THE LIEN.—Do not give up possession of the property until the debt is paid.

9. REAL PROPERTY.—If the debt is on a house, barn or other real property, file a lien on the whole property, and have it recorded in the county recorder's office. The claim then partakes of the nature of a mortgage.

10. MECHANIC'S LIEN.—Nearly all the states permit liens designed to protect certain classes of individuals, who furnish material and labor for the erection, construction, repair, and improvement of buildings. The method of securing these liens and enforcing them varies so widely in the different states that it is almost impossible to give such a statement as will cover all states. The courts have construed such laws very strictly, and in order to entitle a person to such lien the provisions of the law granting the same must be strictly complied with. Individuals desiring to avail themselves of these statutes should consult a lawyer and have him prepare the necessary papers. The following form is the one commonly in use in the State of Illinois:

vs.) Claim for Lien Martin Smith)

The Claimant, JULIUS WARREN, of the City of Wheaton, County of Du Page, State of Illinois, hereby files a Claim for Lien against Martin Smith of Du Page County, Illinois, and states:

That on the first day of October, 19...., said Martin Smith was the owner of the following described land, to wit: Lot two (2) in Block three (3) of the original town of Hinsdale, in the County of Du Page and State of Illinois.

That on the first day of October, 19...., the Claimant made a contract with said owner to furnish labor and materials for the building to be erected on said land for the sum of Seven Hundred Fifty Dollars ($750.00), and on the 23rd day of October, 19...., completed all work required to be done by said contract.

That said owner is entitled to credits on account thereof totaling $250.00, leaving due, unpaid and owing to the Claimant on account thereof, after allowing all credits, the balance of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00), for which, with interest, the Claimant claims a lien on said land and improvements.

Mortgage

1. DEFINITION.—A mortgage is a conveyance of property, either real or personal, given to secure the payment of a debt. When the debt is paid the mortgage becomes void and is released. The person who mortgages his property is called the mortgagor. The person to whom the mortgage is given is the mortgagee.

2. REQUIREMENTS.—All real estate mortgages must be in writing, and under seal unless the seal has been abolished by statute. The instrument must clearly state the amount of the debt and the day on which it falls due. The property must be clearly described. The mortgage must then be acknowledged before the proper public official and properly recorded in the county records. The mortgagor usually gives a bond or note as evidence of the indebtedness, stating on its face that it is secured by a mortgage of the same date.

3. POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY generally remains with the mortgagor. The mortgagor also receives all rents and profits from the property, and pays all taxes and other expenses.

4. IMPROVEMENTS TO THE PROPERTY.—If a mortgagor erects buildings on mortgaged land and the mortgage is foreclosed, the mortgagee in taking possession gets all these additions. If the mortgagee erects buildings and the mortgagor thereafter redeems his land, he gets the buildings without paying for them.

5. ASSIGNMENT.—A mortgagee can transfer, sell, or assign his mortgage at any time regardless of the wishes of the mortgagor. On the other hand, if the mortgagor wishes to sell his real estate he must sell subject to the mortgage. In other words, he can do nothing to invalidate the mortgagee's security.

6. INSURANCE.—The property may be insured by both parties. In case of loss by fire the holder of the mortgage can collect the insurance which he had on the property. Practically all mortgages now contain provisions requiring the mortgagor to keep the property properly insured. The insurance policy contains a clause showing the name of the mortgagee or trustee and providing for his protection in case of loss by fire; and the policy itself is usually held by the mortgagee.

7. FORECLOSURE.—A foreclosure is a legal proceeding to sell the property mortgaged to satisfy the debt. If the property is sold to satisfy the debt, the mortgagor has a right to purchase it. The following steps are necessary for a foreclosure:

- (a) Application to a court.
- (b) A hearing by the court.
- (c) Referring to a master in chancery or a referee.

- (d) Advertising the property.
- (e) Public sale to the highest bidder.
- (f) Deeding the property to the purchaser.
- (g) Paying the money due to the mortgagee.
- (h) Returning any surplus to the mortgagor.

8. REDEMPTION.—Formerly, a mortgagor could redeem his land only before or when the debt became due, but further time is now given. This right to redeem is called a right in equity to redeem, or an equity of redemption. The redemption period varies in different states according to statutes. This right to redeem is considered of so much importance that no party is permitted to lose it even by his own agreement. Even though the mortgagor agrees in the most positive terms to forfeit his equity of redemption, the law disregards such agreement and gives the debtor full time to redeem his property.

9. GENERAL PRINCIPLES:—

- a. A mortgage may be made to cover future advances.
- b. As the county records are public and may be examined by anyone, the injured party alone is responsible if he buys, or lends money on, a piece of property without first making certain that there are no encumbrances on it.
- c. The law assumes that the mortgage contract covers all the agreements concerning the payment of the debt and the return of the property. The courts, therefore, ignore other agreements made at the same time. Later agreements, however, will hold if based on valid consideration.
- d. Several mortgages may be made on the same piece of real estate. The one recorded first has the first lien.
- e. A creditor cannot compel payment of the mortgage before it is due. Neither can the debtor compel the creditor to accept the payment before it is due.
- f. If after a foreclosure there is any deficit due the mortgagee, the mortgagor is still liable. (See CHATTEL MORTGAGE.)
- g. A trust deed serves the same purpose as a real estate mortgage but conveys the property to a third party as trustee to hold title for the mortgagee, instead of conveying title direct to the mortgagee himself.

10. A TRUST DEED is a deed to a piece of real estate held by a third party in trust as security for a note. This deed is very extensively used because it takes the place of a mortgage deed and renders the note negotiable. States frequently have statutory forms for trust deeds, and where such forms exist it is advisable to use them.

Form of Trust Deed

This deed, made this day of, 19...., between of, county of and state of, of the one part, and of, and of of the other part, witnesseth, that the party of the first part doth grant unto the parties of the second part the following property, to wit:

(Insert description of property)

in trust, to secure to of, in the state of the payment of dollars in years from this date, with interest at per cent per annum thereon, according to a promissory note made by the party of the first part to said for said sum.

In event that default shall be made in the payment of the above-mentioned sum as it becomes due and payable, then the trustees, or either of them, on being required so to do by, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall sell the property hereby conveyed. And it is covenanted and agreed between the parties aforesaid that in case of a sale the same shall be made after first advertising the time, place, and terms thereof for days in some newspaper published in the said county of and upon the following terms, to wit: for cash as to so much of the proceeds as may be necessary to defray the expenses of executing this trust, the fees for drawing and recording this deed, if then unpaid, and to discharge the amount of money then payable upon said note; and if there be any residue of such purchase money, the same shall be made payable at such time, and be secured in such manner, as, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall prescribe and direct, or in case of his or their failure to give such direction, at such time and in such manner as the trustees, or either of them, shall think fit. The party of the first part covenants to pay all taxes, assessments, dues, and charges upon the said property hereby conveyed so long as he or his heirs or assigns shall hold the same, and hereby waives the benefit of all homestead exemptions as to the debt secured by this deed.

If no default shall be made in the payment of the above-mentioned debt, then, upon the request of the party of the first part, a good and sufficient deed of release shall be executed to him at his own proper costs.

Municipal Corporations

1. DEFINITION.—A municipal corporation is a corporation formed to carry on the work of government in a town or city. Its charter is granted by the State and it possesses only such powers as the State confers upon it, and no others.

2. POWERS.—A city government is usually given the power:

- a. to make its own laws or ordinances with reference to matters over which its charter gives it jurisdiction,
- b. to enforce its laws,
- c. to control all matters and things within its corporate boundaries within the limits fixed by its charter,
- d. to issue bonds

3. OFFICERS OF A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.—The mayor is usually the chief executive, the Board of Aldermen the lawmaking body, of a municipality. The titles of these officers vary widely, however, in the different states. Under the commission form of government the above offices are held by a commission of three or five men, who have complete charge of the business of city government. The judicial power is usually vested in the police magistrate's court, or in larger cities in the municipal court. These are courts of limited jurisdiction only, however, and their jurisdiction does not supersede or conflict with that of the courts of the county in which they are situated.

4. WRONGFUL ACTS OF OFFICERS.—The city is not responsible for damage for injuries to persons or property caused in the execution of a governmental duty. But what is considered a governmental duty is a question that has been the source of much litigation. The city is not liable for false arrest, false imprisonment, or assaults by police officers. If any wrongful act is committed by an officer while acting in his official capacity, he is liable personally.

5. THE CITY'S DUTY.—It is the duty of the city government to provide and maintain safe and passable streets and highways, maintain police and fire protection, and provide for the general safety and welfare of its citizens.

6. LIABILITY.—If the city fails to maintain safe and passable streets, the city is liable for damages resulting to those rightfully upon the streets, provided the city had notice that the streets were unsafe and not passable, and failed to exercise reasonable care to make the streets safe. It is almost universally held that a city is not liable for loss or injury resulting from failure to maintain proper police and fire protection.

7. POLICE POWER OF CITIES.—The police power of a city extends to the city limits and a reasonable distance beyond the city limits in certain instances. The police magistrate, sometimes called the recorder, sits in a court having jurisdiction equal to that of a justice of the peace. The police magistrate and the police officers are bound to enforce the laws of the city, called ordinances. An officer may arrest a person:

- a. When a wrongful act is committed in his presence.
- b. Upon a valid warrant.
- c. Upon suspicion, when well grounded and in good faith, no warrant then being necessary.

8. SCHOOLS.—The schools of a city are usually controlled by a board of education. This board has control and supervision over teachers, students, buildings, and all other matters pertaining to public education.

9. PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.—Any corporation furnishing the public as a whole a service or commodity is called a public service corporation. Its activities are as a rule controlled and supervised by a public service commission having the power to fix prices and regulate many of the activities of the corporations that affect the public.

Negotiable Instruments

1. DEFINITION.—A negotiable instrument is any paper that may be transferred by endorsement or delivery in such a way as to give the person receiving it the right to bring a suit thereon in his own name. The person who promises to pay is called the maker or drawer, and the one to whom he promises is called the payee.

2. KINDS OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.—Almost every written contract or agreement to pay money is negotiable, in the sense that the owner can sell it to a third person who can enforce it against the maker. However, in the more strict sense of the word there are three common forms of negotiable paper, namely, checks, notes, and bills of exchange or drafts.

3. FORM OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.—The law does not require negotiable instruments to be in any prescribed form. However, certain things are necessary in all checks, notes, or bills of exchange to make them negotiable:

- a. The instrument must be in writing.
- b. It must be signed by the maker or drawer.
- c. It must contain a promise or order to pay.
- d. The promise or order must be unconditional.
- e. The promise or order must be a promise or order to pay a certain sum in money.
- f. The instrument must be payable on demand or at a fixed or determinable time in the future.
- g. The instrument must be payable to the order of some person, or to bearer.
- h. If the instrument is addressed to a drawee, as would be the case if it were a bill of exchange or draft, the drawee must be named or otherwise indicated in the instrument with reasonable certainty.

4. CONSIDERATION.—While it is not always necessary to express any consideration in negotiable paper, it is safer to do so. When an instrument is in the hands of an innocent third party, the law assumes a valuable consideration. The words "for value received" usually appear on promissory notes.

5. PROTEST.—A protest of a note, check, or draft is a formal statement by a notary public that the paper was presented for payment and was refused. The costs are added to the instrument.

6. NEGOTIABILITY.—The words "to bearer," or "to the order of," or words of like effect, render a paper negotiable. Any person capable of making a contract is capable of making a negotiable instrument. A person who receives a negotiable instrument under the conditions hereinafter mentioned becomes what is known as a "holder in due course," and certain defenses which might have been raised against the original holder cannot be raised against him. He must have taken the instrument under the following conditions: (1) The instrument must be complete and regular on its face. (2) It must not have been overdue, and the holder must not have known it was previously dishonored if such were the fact. (3) He must have taken it in good faith and paid value for it. (4) At the time he took it he must have had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it to him.

A. NOTES

7. DEFINITIONS.—A note is a simple written promise to pay a certain sum at a certain time to a person named therein. An individual promissory note is a note in which one party promises to pay another a certain sum of money at a specified time. A joint promissory note is the same as an individual note except that it is signed by two or more parties, all of whom are liable jointly but not severally. In a joint and several promissory note two or more parties severally and separately agree to pay a certain sum at a specified time, and each signer is responsible for the whole amount. Statutes in many states provide that all joint obligations shall be held to be joint and several.

8. TRANSFERRING NOTES.—The following rules govern the transferring of notes:

- a. Instruments payable to bearer may be transferred by delivery, payable to order by endorsement.
- b. An endorser is a person who writes his name on the back of a note or other instrument.
- c. Endorsement in blank is an endorsement which does not mention the name of the person in whose favor it is made.
- d. The endorser is liable for the payment of a note if the maker fails to meet it and the endorser is properly notified.
- e. An endorser who is compelled to pay a note has a claim against the maker and against each endorser whose name appears above his own.
- f. An endorser to whose order a note is drawn or endorsed can transfer it without becoming liable for its payment by writing the words "without recourse" over his signature on the back.

9. COLLECTING NOTES.—

- a. A note destroyed by mistake or accident can be collected upon proof of loss.
- b. Money paid by mistake must be refunded.

- c. If no time is specified the note is payable on demand.
- d. The day of maturity is the day on which a note becomes legally due.
- e. In finding the day of maturity, actual days must be counted if the note falls due a specific number of days after the day on which it was drawn, but months are counted when the note falls due a specific number of months after the day on which it was drawn.
- f. Negotiable paper to bearer or endorsed in blank, which has been lost or stolen, cannot be collected by the finder or thief, but a holder who innocently receives it in good faith before maturity for value received can hold it against the owner's claims.
- g. A note made in one state, payable in another, must be governed by the laws of that state in which it is to be paid.
- h. Demand for payment of a note must be made upon the day of maturity and at the place named. If no place is specified, it is payable at the maker's place of business or at his residence. In most of the states, when a note falls due on a Sunday or legal holiday, by statute the maker is given until the following day to pay the same.
- i. An extension of the time of a note by the holder, releases sureties and endorsers, unless consent to such extension has been given by the endorsers or sureties.
- j. Upon presentment for payment and refusal by the maker at maturity, in order to hold the endorser, notice of default must be given to the endorser immediately.

10. PAYMENT OF NOTES.—All the parties who have endorsed a note are liable for the full amount, but only one satisfaction can be recovered. In certain cases notes are unenforceable, especially when held by the original payee. Among such cases are the following:

- a. A note given by one who is not of age, unless the minor ratified it after becoming of age.
- b. A note made by an intoxicated person.
- c. A note given by one who cannot write, and not witnessed at the time.
- d. A note obtained by duress, by putting the maker in fear of illegal imprisonment, or by threats that would lead an ordinary person to fear injury to his person, his reputation, or his property.
- e. A note obtained by fraud.
- f. A note given for illegal consideration.
- g. One who receives a note knowing it to have defects has no better right to collect it than the one from whom he received it.

- h. If a person at the time of taking a note has notice that it is void because of fraud or for any other reason, he cannot collect it.

B. CHECKS

11. DEFINITIONS.—A check is an order drawn upon a bank, payable on demand. The person who writes the check is the drawer, the bank on which the check is drawn is called the drawee, the person to whom the check is made payable is called the payee.

12. SIGNATURE.—A check must be properly signed by the drawer or his duly authorized agent. A signature made on behalf of the drawer by another person is valid if authorized. It should, of course, be written in ink, but a signature made with a pencil or rubber stamp is valid if intended as a signature.

13. PRESENTATION.—A check must be presented for payment within a reasonable time after its issue, or the drawer will be discharged from liability thereon to the extent of the loss caused by the delay; and it is generally held that one day after the receipt of the check is a reasonable time to present or forward the same for presentation.

14. THE AGREEMENT TO PAY is between the bank and the depositor. For this reason a check, of itself, does not operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank. Consequently, should the bank refuse to pay the check, the holder cannot bring action against the bank, unless or until the bank has accepted or certified the check. On the other hand, if the bank fails to fulfill its contract with the depositor he has a just cause of action against the bank. Should the bank refuse to honor a customer's check owing to an employee's mistake in bookkeeping, the bank could be held responsible for any loss resulting therefrom.

15. CERTIFYING A CHECK.—A certification of a check by the bank is equivalent to an acceptance, and discharges the drawer and all the endorsers preceding the holder who secures the certification. When a check is presented to a bank for this purpose, the bank charges the drawer's account with the amount, so that as far as the drawer and the bank are concerned the check has actually been paid. Therefore, if a certified check is not presented at his bank for payment and is returned to the drawer, it should not be destroyed but should be redeposited as cash.

16. STOPPING PAYMENT.—The drawer of the check may order the bank to stop payment on a check before it is presented. The bank is required to follow these instructions and is liable for any loss resulting from failure to do so.

17. FORGED CHECKS.—The law insists that the banker exercise the greatest care in paying the checks of customers. If the signature has been forged or the amount of the check altered, the bank is liable for any improper payment. The drawer of the check must also use every precaution to prevent alterations. He should write in a way to avoid confusing the banker who is to pay the check. The bank is not responsible for any loss caused by negligence on the part of the drawer in making out the check.

18. VITAL POINTS ON CHECKS.—A check is not due until presented. It is negotiable. It has no days of grace. Giving a check is not payment of an indebtedness, unless the check is paid, or unless it is accepted as payment. The death of the drawer of the check before it is presented to the bank renders the check null and void. The amount of the check should always be written out in words as well as in figures. If a raised check is paid by the bank, the bank can charge the depositor only the amount for which he drew the check, unless the raising of the check was made possible by the carelessness of the drawer. In that case the drawer would be responsible for the loss.

If you write a check for a stranger who needs identification at your bank, have him endorse the check in your presence and under his indorsement write "Endorsement above guaranteed," signing your name. He can then usually cash the check without further identification, by signing his name again in the presence of the banker.

C. DRAFTS

19. DEFINITION.—A draft is a written order by one person on another for the payment of a specified sum of money to a designated third person. The one who writes the draft is called the drawer, the one on whom it is written, the drawee, and the one to whom it is to be paid, the payee.

20. KINDS OF DRAFTS.—Drafts may be made payable at sight, on demand, at a certain time after date, or after sight. A sight draft or demand draft is drawn by one person on another and is payable when presented. Time drafts are similar to sight drafts, but are payable a certain number of days after presentation. A Bill of Exchange is an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time a certain sum of money to order or to bearer. The term includes drafts and checks.

21. ACCEPTANCE.—Sight and demand drafts are presented for payment only. Time drafts require acceptance by the party against whom they are drawn in order to bind him. The usual method of acceptance is to write across the face of the draft in red ink the word "accepted," followed by the date and the signature of the drawee. Should the person on whom the draft is drawn die before it was accepted, it should be presented to his legal representative for acceptance.

22. GENERAL PRINCIPLES:—

- a. When either acceptance or payment is refused, the draft may be protested like any note or check.
- b. Drafts are negotiable both before and after acceptance.

D. ENDORSEMENTS

23. DEFINITION.—An endorsement is a writing on the back of a negotiable instrument for the purpose of transferring the title or ownership from one person to another. The writing may be in pen or pencil upon any part of the instrument or upon a paper attached thereto. It consists ordinarily of the payee's signature and that of other holders, if any.

24. HOW TO ENDORSE.—Write across the back of the paper (not lengthwise) near the left end. Always endorse a check or note exactly as your name appears on the face. If the check is payable to F. Black, do not write Frank Black. If your name is misspelled, endorse first as it appears on the face and then write your correct signature underneath; no written explanation is necessary; banks are familiar with this practice. The same rules govern the endorsement of notes, drafts, and other written instruments. A check or other instrument may be endorsed and title thereby transferred many times. Each endorser is liable to those who endorse after him.

25. KINDS OF ENDORSEMENTS:—

An endorsement in blank is made when the payee simply signs his name in the proper place (across the left end of the reverse) without any statement of conditions. Such a note or check is negotiable without further endorsement. Endorsement in blank is commonly used when a check is deposited or cashed at a bank. It should not be used when there is danger of the check's being lost or stolen.

An endorsement in full or special endorsement consists of writing the name of the person to whom, or to whose order, the money is to be paid, followed by the payee's signature. For example: "Pay to F. Black or order, J. Jones"; when endorsed in this form, the check cannot be cashed until F. Black endorses it.

In a qualified endorsement the endorser relieves himself of any liability in connection with the instrument, by writing above his signature the words "Without recourse"; thus, "Without recourse, J. Jones."

A restrictive endorsement limits the payment of the note, bill, or check. The endorser writes "pay to F. Black only," or "for deposit in the First National Bank," signing his name underneath. A check or other instrument so endorsed cannot be further negotiated by the person or bank receiving it. Restrictive endorsement is a wise precaution when there is danger of a negotiable instrument being lost or stolen after endorsement.

A conditional endorsement is one directing payment only upon the performance of a certain condition. The endorser's liability is thereby limited. For example, "Pay to the order of F. Black unless he previously receives the amount from my agent, J. Jones." Neither the original character of the note nor its negotiability is affected by such an endorsement. It may affect, however, the title of the one to whom it is transferred.

Endorsement by an agent is made in the following form: "J. Jones, by H. Smith, his agent." In this manner the agent endorses for his principal.

In a guaranteed endorsement one party guarantees payment on a note for another party. He writes above his signature "I hereby guarantee payment of this note," or words of like effect. He is then absolutely liable for the amount due by the terms of the note in case the maker fails to pay. In effect, he becomes a co-maker.

E. "IOU"

26. An IOU is not a promissory note, and is not negotiable. It is evidence of a debt due by virtue of a previous contract. The following is an example:

Chicago, Ill., June 4, 1940

Mr. A. O. Rogers,
IOU Sixty Dollars ($60.00).

W. G. ALLEN.

F. DUE BILLS

27. A due bill is not payable to order, nor is it assignable by mere endorsement. It is simply the acknowledgment of a debt; yet it may be transferred. It may be payable in money, in merchandise, or in services.

Due bills do not draw interest unless so specified.

$125.00 Chicago, Aug. 14, 19....

Due Henry Harrington, for value received,
One Hundred and Twenty-Five dollars with interest at six per cent.

Q. YINZER.

CHARLES SCHUERER.

G. RECEIPTS

28. A receipt is an acknowledgment in writing that a certain sum of money or thing has been received by the party giving and signing the same.

29. A complete receipt requires the following statements: that a payment has been received; the date of the payment; the amount of article received; from whom received, and if for another, on whose behalf payment is made; to what debt or purpose it is to be applied; the signature of the person receiving the property, and if for another, on whose behalf it was received.

30. If the giving and taking of receipts were more generally practiced in business transactions, less trouble, fewer lawsuits, and the saving of thousands of dollars would result.

31. If payment is made upon account, upon a special debt, or in full, it should be so stated in the receipt.

32. When an agent signs a receipt, he should sign his principal's name and then write his name underneath as agent.

33. It is not necessary to take a receipt on paying a note, draft, or other instrument indorsed by the payee, because the instrument itself becomes a receipt.

34. If a receipt is obtained through fraud, or given under error or mistake, it is void.

EDWARD TRONT.

Notaries Public

1. THE OFFICE AND ITS FUNCTIONS.—The office of notary public as it exists in the several states today is the outgrowth of various practices traceable to the Roman Empire. Anciently merely a scribe, the power and duties of the notary have been amplified by legislative enactments to meet the needs of changing conditions and a growing civilization. His commission is granted upon representation of his capacity and integrity. In accepting office the notary contracts the obligation to fill it intelligently and honestly.

2. DEFINITION.—A notary public is a state officer whose function is to attest and certify, by his hand and official seal, various documents, in order to give them authenticity in other jurisdictions, to take acknowledgments of deeds and other conveyances and instruments, and to certify the same; and to perform other official acts, the power to do which is conferred by statutory enactment.

3. CLASSIFICATION OF FUNCTIONS.—As a general rule the functions of a notary are ministerial, not judicial. They are confined to the civil, as distinguished from the criminal, branch of the law, and consist for the most part in protesting inland and foreign bills of exchange and promissory notes, authenticating their dishonor by the refusal of the drawee or payee to accept or pay them on presentation or when due; the authentication of transfers or conveyances of property, and other documents required by law to be authenticated; administering oaths and affirmations as to correctness of accounts; the taking of depositions under the rules and instructions of the courts when cases are pending; and the taking of affidavits as to the truth of statements made in legal papers for use in proceedings before courts of civil or maritime jurisdiction.

4. DEFINITION OF FUNCTIONS.—The term protest as applied to commercial paper means the taking of such steps as are required to charge or fix liability upon one secondarily liable, such as an endorser. As applied to the notarial act, it means a declaration made in writing by a notary public after doing the acts certified, that the bill or note to which it relates was, on the day it became due, presented for payment, and that payment was refused. To authenticate a document means for a notary to certify under his hand and seal of office with a notice of the date and in most states the expiration of his commission, such facts as the law requires to give the document operative effect. A deposition is the testimony of a witness taken down in writing, under oath or affirmation before a notary public, and usually subscribed by the witness, pursuant to special authority granted by a court after notice to the adverse party. It is authenticated by the notary. An affidavit is a voluntary statement, formally reduced to writing and sworn to or affirmed and subscribed before a notary public. An acknowledgment is an oral declaration or admission made by one who has executed a document, made before a notary public or other officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments, to the effect that the execution is his act and deed.

The written certificate endorsed on the document by the officer taking the acknowledgment, certifying to the facts of the same, is sometimes referred to as "an acknowledgment." The function of an acknowledgment is two-fold—to authorize the document to be given in evidence without further proof of its execution, and to entitle it to be recorded. A notary's certificate of acknowledgment is not part of its execution, but only evidence of it. At least six essential facts must appear in a certificate of acknowledgment: (1) the designation of the officer making the certificate; (2) the name of the person making the acknowledgment, and that he or she personally appeared before the officer; (3) that there was an acknowledgment; (4) that the person who made the acknowledgment was identified as the one who executed the instrument; (5) that such identity was personally known or proved by the officer taking the acknowledgment; (6) the day and year when the acknowledgment was made. An oath is an outward pledge, given by the person taking it, that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God.

5. FORM AND MANNER OF ADMINISTERING

OATHS, AFFIDAVITS, AND AFFIRMATIONS.—The customary and approved manner of administering an oath or taking an affidavit is to have the person making the same raise his hand and swear by the everliving God. There should be at least some manifestation that the officer and the person taking the oath understand the nature of their undertaking; a mere mental process is not sufficient. In many states the form and manner of taking an oath are prescribed by law.

Any person who desires may in lieu of an oath or affidavit take and subscribe or assent to an affirmation, which is administered by the officer repeating the words, "You do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm that," etc., "and so you do affirm." It is not unusual to ask the question, "Do you swear or affirm" rather than to wait for the deponent to express his desire. A strict and solemn compliance with these forms is important. Any person who willfully and falsely swears or affirms to any material matter is guilty of perjury. The average citizen is inclined to attach only such importance and solemnity to these acts as the officer administering them shows. To perform these acts in a perfunctory manner is to deprive them of their intended value, and in some instances to encourage perjury.

Parent and Child

1. ANCIENT AUTHORITY.—In past ages the father was by custom considered an absolute monarch of the home. In the oriental countries of today the same custom still prevails; modern progress and modern ideas, however, have changed old customs, and the authority of the parent in civilized countries has been considerably limited by law.

2. RIGHTS OF PARENTS.—The parent has the right of control over his child, and has all reasonable authority to enforce obedience. As long as the parent treats his child properly, no one has a right to interfere with his authority, or take the child away and retain him against the wishes of the parent.

3. A RUNAWAY CHILD.—A child has no right to leave home without permission of the parent, and should a child run away he can be brought back by force. If relatives or other parties keep him and refuse to give him up, the parent by legal process can obtain possession of his child, unless it can be shown that the father is brutal, or is not a fit person, on account of drunkenness or other causes, to take proper care of his child.

4. PUNISHMENT OF CHILDREN.—A parent has a right to punish his minor child, provided he is not guilty of cruelty or brutality, which are crimes punishable by severe legal penalties. The parent must be reasonable in his punishment, and in no way injure the health of the child.

5. RIGHTS TO EARNINGS.—A parent is entitled to all the earnings of his minor child. If the child should refuse to turn over his earnings to the parent, the employer of the child may be notified, and be compelled to pay the parent only.

6. SPECIAL RIGHTS.—The parent may, however, free his child from all obligations to himself and allow the child to collect his own wages for himself. When a parent thus makes public such a declaration, he cannot thereafter collect the child's wages.

7. THE PROPERTY OF THE CHILD.—A parent may control the earnings of the child, yet he has no control of the property belonging to the child, acquired either by gift or by legacy, or in any other way. If a parent should appropriate his child's property, it would be just as criminal in the eyes of the law as stealing.

8. PARENT'S OBLIGATION TO SUPPORT.—Parents are legally held for the support of their minor children. The fact that a child has property does not relieve the parent from the support of his child; he, however, can apply to court and get permission to use a part, or all, of the income of the property for the child's support.

9. ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN.—It is a parent's duty to support an illegitimate child. Such a child has legally no father, but his putative father, as he is called, may be compelled to furnish the child with reasonable support, so that it shall not become a burden upon the community. All children born in wedlock are legitimate, unless it is proved that the husband could not possibly be the father. The adultery of the wife cannot affect the legitimacy of the child. It is presumed to be that of the husband. It makes no difference how soon after marriage the child is born. A child born the same day as the marriage, if subsequent to the ceremony, is legitimate unless there is reason for believing that the husband is not the actual father.

10. EFFECT OF ILLEGITIMACY.—The only important legal effect of illegitimacy is that the child cannot generally inherit property from his father. He may, of course, take a legacy given to him by his putative father's will, but if there is no will, he generally cannot inherit. An illegitimate child usually inherits from his mother even though there are legitimate children.

11. CHILDREN'S OBLIGATIONS.—Where the parents or grandparents are unable to support themselves, in many states the child is legally held for their support and care.

12. CRIMES.—A parent cannot be held for crimes committed by his minor child. If a child commits a premeditated crime, he is personally liable.

13. GUARDIAN.—If a child has no parents living, a guardian may be appointed, or if he has arrived at a certain age, varying in different states, he may petition the court for the appointment of his own guardian, who will in a legal sense exercise the prerogative of a parent.

14. CONTRACTS WITH A MINOR.—A contract made by a minor is valid if it is for necessities. Just what constitutes a necessity depends on the circumstances and is a matter for the jury to decide. If a minor contracts for other things, the contract is not always void, but may be avoided by the minor. Even though a minor fraudulently represents himself to be of age and makes a contract for goods, the seller cannot recover on the contract. His only remedy is an action of deceit. A minor who has a parent or guardian cannot make a contract even for necessities. But if the minor receives and retains such articles with the permission of the parent or guardian, the parent or guardian will be deemed to have ratified the contract and will be held personally liable. If the parent or guardian is unwilling to provide the necessities he can be compelled to do so by the courts.

Parliamentary Law

1. PARLIAMENTARY RULES.—In every community it is necessary to hold public meetings from time to time, and in order to expedite the proceedings of such meetings, as well as to settle matters of dispute, it is necessary that rules of procedure be adopted. In order to be able to take an intelligent interest and part in such meetings, it is essential that young and old be informed on the most important points of parliamentary rules.

2. RULES OF PARLIAMENTARY LAW.—The following rules and suggestions will be found helpful in conducting public meetings:

- a. The chairman selected should be a person of maturity and one held in respect and confidence.
- b. To address the meeting permission must be obtained from the chairman by rising and saying: "Mr. President" or "Mr. Chairman."
- c. No speaker should be interrupted unless his remarks are out of order, when he should be called to order by the chair. If the chairman fails to call him to order, any member may do so.
- d. The proper way to make a motion is to say: "Mr. Chairman, I move that (here state motion)."
- e. When a motion is presented to the meeting and seconded, it should be stated or read by the secretary or chairman.
- f. After debate, the motion should be put to the meeting, the chairman announcing the result.
- g. A speaker is "out of order" when he is speaking of matters and things foreign to the issue before the house.
- h. Any violation of rules must be recognized and checked by the presiding officer.
- i. When a member is called to order by the president, he should take his seat, unless he is permitted to explain.
- j. Any ruling of the chairman may be appealed and decided by a vote.
- k. It is the privilege of any member to call for the yeas and nays and thus put on record the vote of every member.
- l. The chairman is the servant, not the master, of the house. To get rid of an undesirable chairman, the house may refuse to do any business, or may adjourn.
- m. A motion to adjourn is always in order and is not debatable.

3. OVER THREE HUNDRED POINTS OF ORDER.—Trace up each reference on the next page, and then look up the corresponding numbers which give information bearing on the point in question.

POINTS OF ORDER

1. Question undebatable; sometimes remarks tacitly allowed.
2. Undebatable if another question is before the assembly.
3. Debatable question.
4. Limited debate only on propriety of postponement.
5. Does not allow reference to main question.
6. Opens the main question to debate.
7. Cannot be amended.
8. May be amended.
9. Can be reconsidered.
10. Cannot be reconsidered.
11. An affirmative vote on this question cannot be reconsidered.
12. Requires two-thirds vote, unless special rules have been enacted.
13. Simple majority suffices to determine the question.
14. Motion must be seconded.
15. Does not require to be seconded.
16. Not in order when another has the floor.
17. Always in order though another may have the floor.
18. May be moved and entered on the record when another has the floor, but the business then before the assembly may not be put aside. The motion must be made by one who voted with the prevailing side, and on the same day the original vote was taken.
19. Fixing the time to which an adjournment may be made; ranks first.
20. To adjourn without limitation; second.
21. Motion for the Orders of the Day; third.
22. Motion to lay on the table; fourth.
23. Motion for the previous question; fifth.
24. Motion to postpone definitely; sixth.
25. Motion to commit; seventh.
26. Motion to amend; eighth.
27. Motion to postpone indefinitely; ninth.
28. On motion to strike out words, "Shall the words stand as part of the motion?" unless a majority sustains the words they are struck out.
29. On motion for previous question the form to be observed is: "Shall the main question be now put?" This, if carried, ends debate.
30. On an appeal from the chair's decision, "Shall the decision be sustained as the ruling of the house?" the chair is usually sustained.
31. A motion for Orders of the Day is put in the following form: "Will the house now proceed to the Orders of the Day?" This, if carried, supersedes intervening motions.
32. When an objection is raised to considering question, "Shall the question be considered?" objection may be made by any member before debate has commenced, but not subsequently.

Partnership

1. DEFINITION.—The Uniform Partnership Act defines a partnership as "an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit."

2. KINDS OF PARTNERSHIP.—A general partnership is one in which the partners agree to enter into a certain business without limitation or condition. There may also be a partnership in a single transaction, such as to buy and sell a single oil lease. An implied partnership is one in which one party acts in such a way as to lead outsiders to believe that partnership actually exists. In a special or limited partnership there may be general partners with unlimited liability and special partners with limited liability.

3. KINDS OF PARTNER.—A general partner is one who is generally known as a partner and whose liability is not limited. A secret partner is one who is not openly declared as a partner. A silent partner takes no active part in the business but shares in the profits, losses, and liabilities. A nominal partner is held out as a partner without sharing in the profits or losses of the business although he may be active in it.

4. FORMING A PARTNERSHIP.—A partnership is formed by an agreement, usually in writing, though it may be oral. Any persons competent to transact business in their own names may become partners. Partners often have separate fields of endeavor, each doing the work for which he is best fitted. The article of agreement should specify the division of profits and losses and should be very carefully drawn. In the absence of any written agreement the law assumes that the partners share profits and losses equally. A partnership may hold both real and personal property.

5. LIABILITY.—Each partner is a general agent and has full authority to act for the partnership. Not only common property, but also all the private property of each partner may be taken to satisfy the debts of the firm. A partner cannot make the firm responsible for his separate or private debt, nor bind the firm by entering into engagements unconnected with, or foreign to, the partnership. The authority of a partner usually extends to the making or endorsing of negotiable paper, and to all transactions fairly connected with the business. A person who, after due care, lends money to one of a partnership firm for the firm, can hold the firm liable, although the money is fraudulently appropriated by the partner to his own use. An illegal contract made by one partner will not bind the partnership.

6. HOW TO AVOID LIABILITY.—In order to avoid individual liability in transacting business, the partners may form a corporation or a limited liability partnership. The latter consists of two or more general partners and also special partners, whose contribution and liability are made known to the public. These special partners are liable only for the amount of capital they advanced.

7. DISSOLUTION.—There are numerous ways in which a partnership may be dissolved, as follows:

- a. Any partner, upon due notice to others, may withdraw at any time provided no specific date for the dissolution of the partnership is mentioned in the articles of agreement. There is some authority, however, to the effect that the power to withdraw should be exercised in a good faith so as not to prejudice the other partners. The retiring partner should notify the public of his retirement in order to relieve himself from future liability.
- b. The partnership may be dissolved by mutual consent.
- c. The death of one of the partners automatically dissolves the partnership.
- d. The taking in of a new partner constitutes a new partnership. This is usually a matter of reorganization and the new partnership may or may not assume liabilities of the old firm.
- e. The insanity or bankruptcy of one of the partners ends the partnership.
- f. A court may dissolve a partnership for any good reason such as incapacity, drunkenness, or fraud.
- g. The expiration of the time specified in the articles of partnership acts as a dissolution.

8. LIQUIDATION.—In case of failure the assets of the partnership must be used to pay the debts of the partnership, the assets of the partners to pay their personal debts. If in either case any property remains, the partnership property is applied on the personal debts, and the partners' personal property must go towards the partnership debts. The affairs of the insolvent partnership are usually placed in the hands of one of the partners, subject to control of the court, or turned over to a receiver appointed by the court, either of whom has the right to liquidate the affairs of the partnership.

Passports

1. Passports are issued by the United States Department of State for the purpose of providing citizens and nationals who are traveling abroad with documentary evidence identifying them as entitled to the protection afforded such persons. Some countries require a visa, that is, a stamp of approval, to be affixed to the passport by the consulate of the country to be visited. Other countries do not insist on this formality. Some countries that do not require visas ask visitors making a short stay to fill out tourist cards.

The United States government does not issue passports for travel to Communist-controlled parts of China, Korea, or Vietnam or to Albania or Cuba unless special circumstances prevail that require travel to either Albania or Cuba.

2. An application for a passport must be executed before a clerk of a Federal court or a state court authorized to accept applications or before an agent of the Passport Office, Department of State. Passport agents are located in Boston, Chicago, Honolulu, Los Angeles, Miami, New Orleans, New York, San Francisco, Seattle, and Washington, D.C.

3. To obtain a passport, a native-born citizen must submit a birth certificate or baptismal certificate or a certified copy of the record of baptism. If these are not available, he may submit secondary evidence.

No witness is required if proof of identity is sufficient. Otherwise a witness must take oath that he has known the applicant for over two years.

A person claiming U.S. citizenship through birth abroad must present consular report of birth, birth certificate, certificate of citizenship, or evidence of parent's citizenship.

A married woman must submit evidence of citizenship and also evidence of marriage under certain conditions. Special regulations govern women married prior to 1922:

- a. An American woman who was married to a native American citizen prior to September 22, 1922, may submit evidence of either her own or her husband's American citizenship. One married to a naturalized American citizen prior to September 22, 1922, must submit evidence of her husband's naturalization.
- b. An American woman who lost American citizenship by marriage to an alien, but who alleges that after the termination of the marital relation and prior to September 22, 1922, she resumed American citizenship, must submit evidence that she was an American citizen at the time of marriage. If the marital relation is alleged to have been terminated by divorce, a certified copy of the decree of court granting the absolute divorce should be submitted. A legal separation or an interlocutory decree of divorce does not terminate marriage.
- c. An American woman who was married to an American citizen or to an alien on or after September 22, 1922, must submit evidence of her own citizenship.
- d. An alien woman eligible to naturalization who was married to an American citizen prior to September 22, 1922, must submit evidence of her husband's American citizenship.

4. A person who claims American citizenship by naturalization must submit with his application a certificate of naturalization.

5. A person who claims citizenship by the naturalization of husband or parent must submit with application for a passport the naturalization certificate of the husband or parent.

6. An alien leaving the United States must request passport facilities from his home government. He must have a permit from his local Collector of Internal Revenue. If he wishes to return to the United States, he should request a re-entry permit from the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

7. Persons traveling because of a contract with the U.S. government must submit letters from their employer stating their position and the purpose of travel.

8. Persons of military draft age may receive passports but should inform their draft boards of their whereabouts.

PHOTOGRAPHS

9. Two recently taken photographs (duplicates) must be submitted of each person named in application, one affixed to the application, the other, signed by the applicant, must accompany the application unattached. A group photograph should be used when a wife, or wife and children, are included in one application. Photographs must be full face, on thin paper, with a light background, and not over 3 x 3 inches nor less than 2½ by 2½ inches in size. Photographs printed on photographic paper the back of which is glazed, will not adhere to passports and therefore will not be accepted.

FEES

10. A passport costs $9. A fee of $1 is added when the passport is executed by a passport agent or by a clerk of a Federal court. A state court may charge $2. A person on official business need not pay the passport fee if he has a sponsoring letter. Emergency clearance costs $2 at all agencies except those in New York City, where it is $1. Emergency service fee after working hours is $10 in addition to the passport fee.

VALIDITY AND RENEWAL OF PASSPORTS

11. A passport issued prior to Sept. 14, 1959, was valid for two years unless limited. It could be renewed for two years for $5. Applications for renewal could be made one and one-half years from the date of original issue.

Passports issued on and after Sept. 14, 1959, are valid for three years, unless limited, and may be renewed for two years for $5. Application for renewal should be made after two and one-half years after original issue.

12. If a passport is lost, the U.S. Department of State should be notified. If it is lost abroad, the owner should report the loss to the U.S. Consul.

HEALTH REQUIREMENTS

13. A valid smallpox vaccination certificate issued within three years must be shown by all persons entering the United States.

Valid vaccination certificates are required from persons arriving from cholera-infected areas within five days. Similar certificates are required from persons arriving from yellow fever-infected areas within six days and destined for receptive areas in the United States.

Vaccinations should be recorded on International Certificates of Vaccination. The smallpox and cholera vaccination certificates should be stamped by the local or state health office.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

14. A naturalized American citizen who visits his homeland may be subject to military service and other regulations there. The U.S. State Department recommends that such a naturalized citizen get specific information from the consulate of the country of origin before departure.

15. A British citizen who becomes a naturalized American citizen is considered a British citizen by the British government until he makes a formal renunciation of British nationality before the British authorities.

16. A French citizen wishing to become an American citizen is required by French law to have French authorization any time within fifteen years of his enrollment in the army unless he has been exempted, has a final discharge, or is over military age, or unless he has fulfilled his military obligations in the U.S. Army during World War I and World War II. An American woman who marries a Frenchman acquires French nationality unless prior to her marriage she declines it.

17. For Israel there are two types of visas, visitors' visas and immigration visas. A visitor's visa is limited to three months and may be renewed. An immigration visa must be obtained by a person who wishes to live in Israel permanently. Such a person must give military service if a male between 18 and 49 inclusive or if a female between 18 and 38 inclusive. Authorization must be obtained from the Ministry of Defense if the person wishes to leave the country before completing military service. Jews who have immigration visas acquire Israeli nationality automatically unless they disavow any intention to a consul of Israel or to the Israeli government.

18. An American citizen who voluntarily joins a foreign army loses his American citizenship unless he has the written consent of the U.S. government to do so.

19. Each returning resident of the United States, whether a citizen or not, may bring free of duty merchandise for personal use worth a maximum of $100. Members of a family may pool their exemptions if they live in the same household and travel together. The exemption cannot be claimed more often than once in thirty-one days.

20. Articles purchased abroad and intended to be gifts may be shipped to the United States before or after the return of the U.S. resident. They must be addressed to him or to him in care of some other person and declared in customs. Also, free entry is permitted for bona fide gifts not exceeding $10 in value and sent to persons in the U.S.

Patents

1. DEFINITION.—As here used the word patent is defined to mean the granting by the United States to inventors for limited time the exclusive right to the use, manufacture, and sale of their own inventions. The instrument by which this privilege is confirmed to the inventor is called the "letters patent" and is issued in the name of the United States of America under the seal of the Patent Office and is signed by the Secretary of the Interior, and countersigned by the Commissioner of Patents.

2. ITEMS PATENTABLE.—The law provides that "Any person who has invented or discovered any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or who has invented or discovered and asexually reproduced any distinct and new variety of plant, other than a tuber-propagated plant, not known or used by others in this country before his invention or discovery thereof, and not patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country before his invention or discovery thereof, for more than one year prior to his application, and not patented in a country foreign to the United States . . . more than twelve months before his application, and not in public use or on sale in the United States for more than one year prior to his application, unless the same is proved to have been abandoned, may, upon payment of the fees required by law, and other due proceedings had, obtain a patent."

3. FOREIGN PATENT NOT A BAR.—A person is not debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery by reason of its first having been patented in a foreign country unless his application for the foreign patent was filed more than twelve months prior to his filing of the application in the United States. In the case of patenting designs, the interval is limited to six months.

4. DURATION OF PATENT.—A patent is good for seventeen years, but now cannot be extended except by act of Congress. Inventions previously patented in a foreign country must expire at the same time that the foreign patent expires, but in no case shall they be extended more than seventeen years.

5. HOW SECURED.—The method of securing patents is by petition, which must be in writing addressed to the Commissioner of Patents, and must state the name and residence of the petitioner requesting the granting of a patent, designate by title the invention sought to be patented, and contain a reference to the specifications of the invention. It must be signed by the applicant and attested by two witnesses. An alien may obtain a patent on the same terms as a citizen.

6. SPECIFICATIONS.—The specifications above referred to are a written description of the invention or discovery, and the manner of making, constructing, composing, and using the same, and they are required to be in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which the invention or discovery appertains, to make, construct, compose, and use the same. The inventor or discoverer must point out in particular how his invention or discovery is different from others in the same line.

The specifications and claims should be written on but one side of the paper and signed by the applicant. All interlineations and erasures should be avoided.

7. THE OATH.—The applicant for a patent must make oath or affirmation that he verily believes himself to be the first and original discoverer of the art, machine, manufacture, composition, other article, or improvement for which he solicits a patent; that he does not know and does not believe that the same was ever before known or used. In addition he should state of what country he is a citizen and where he resides, and whether he is a sole or joint inventor.

The oath should be sworn to before a notary public or some other officer authorized to administer oaths and having an official seal.

8. DRAWINGS.—The applicant for patent is required also to furnish drawing of his invention whenever the nature of the case admits. Drawings must be signed by the inventor and must be attested by two witnesses; they must show every feature of the invention covered by the claims. When the invention is an improvement on some old machine, a drawing must exhibit in one or more views the invention itself disconnected from the old structure, and also in another view so much of the old structure as will suffice to show the connection of the invention therewith.

9. MATERIAL.—Drawings must be made upon pure white, calendered, smooth, bristol board of three-sheet thickness. India ink alone must be used. Sheets must be exactly ten by fifteen inches in size. Drawings must be made with pen only, and must be absolutely black. Drawings must be made with the fewest lines possible consistent with clearness.

The scale to which a drawing is made must be large enough to show the mechanism without crowding.

10. SIGNATURE of the inventor should be placed at the lower right-hand corner of each sheet of drawing and two attesting witnesses should sign at the lower left-hand corner. Drawings should be rolled for transmission to the patent office. The drawings must never be folded.

11. MODEL.—A model must be furnished when required by the commissioner.

12. SPECIMENS must be furnished when required by the commissioner.

13. ATTORNEYS.—The practice of the Patent Office allows the applicant to retain an attorney and when the petition is prosecuted by an attorney a power of attorney should be included in the petition. In ordinary cases it is always best to retain some experienced patent attorney to prosecute the application.

14. CAVEATS.—Formerly an inventor could file a caveat setting forth the object and distinguishing characteristics of his invention and asking protection for his right until he had finished his invention. This operated for one year. This law was repealed in 1910, so that the only way an inventor can secure any form of federal protection on his patent is by applying for letters patent.

15. FEES.—The schedule of fees and prices of publications can be had on application to the Commissioner of Patents, Washington, D.C. For any other information concerning patents an inquiry should be addressed to the Commissioner of Patents.

16. PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.—An applicant for a patent may often save considerable expense by having a preliminary examination made of the patents allowed by the Patent Office, to determine whether or not the invention has been patented by somebody else. This examination cannot be made by the Commissioner or any one of his office, but patent attorneys will make the examination for a small fee.

17. ASSIGNMENTS.—Patents may be assigned in whole or in part, and the right to manufacture, sell, and use the patent in any county, state, township, or other district may be granted by the holder of the patent. All such assignments or transfers should be in writing, and are void unless recorded in the Patent Office within three months from their date.

18. FOREIGN PATENTS.—Contrasted with most foreign countries the cost of a patent is very low in the United States and the law is liberal in allowing the inventor to exploit it. The patent will remain protected even though the invention is not manufactured at all. Some European countries will protect patents only as long as the articles are actually manufactured within their own borders, and as long as the taxes are paid. In the United States foreigners can have their inventions patented without manufacturing them here, and without any taxes whatever.

Payment

1. LEGAL TENDER.—In all agreements the payment is to be made in cash unless otherwise stipulated. Since 1933 all coins and currencies of the United States, including Federal Reserve notes, are legal tender for all debts. The United States, however, has ordered that gold coins and certificates payable in gold be exchanged at the Treasury for silver and silver certificates. Any provision in an obligation which calls for payment in gold is against public policy and may be discharged by payment in legal tender.

2. CHECKS.—In modern times checks are given and received in payment of debts. Legally, however, a check is not payment until it is cashed. In other words, a check is a conditional payment and if the check is not honored, the creditor can sue on the check. He can also sue any of the endorers whose names appear on the check. But if the holder of the check does not present it for payment within a reasonable time and the bank on which it is drawn fails, he must suffer the loss caused by the delay.

3. NOTES.—A note given in payment for a debt, may or may not cancel the debt. If the parties intended the note as actual payment the debtor cannot sue on the original debt; he must sue to recover on the note itself. This is a question of the facts in the case, to be determined by the court.

4. APPLYING PAYMENT WHEN THERE IS MORE THAN ONE DEBT.—If a debtor owes more than one debt to the same creditor, he can apply his payments in any way he sees fit. If he fails to do so, the creditor can make the application, and if neither does so, the law applies the payment first to interest due and the balance to the oldest debt. A signer on a note may insist that payment be applied first to the debt on which he is surety.

5. RECEIPTS.—A receipt for a debt is regarded on its face as evidence of payment. This evidence, however, is not conclusive and can sometimes be contradicted by other evidence. For example, suppose "A" gave "B" a receipt for $20.00 and afterwards discovered that the bill "B" had given him was a counterfeit. "A" could introduce evidence to prove fraud and thus invalidate the receipt. A contract embodied in a receipt without seal or consideration is not binding, but if there is a valuable consideration, or if the instrument is under seal, such a contract would be as lawful as any other.

Prescriptive Rights or Easements to Title

1. DEFINITION.—A prescriptive right is a right acquired by use and time and allowed by law.

2. A RIGHT OF WAY.—A person may acquire a permanent right of way over another's land by passing over that land to his own land for a period of time fixed by law. This right of way cannot be acquired against a minor or against any one who is incapable of defending his possessions. A person attempting to establish such a right of way can be stopped by appropriate legal action.

3. A WAY OF NECESSITY.—Sometimes a person sells a part of his farm which is not located on the road. The law allows the purchaser the right to enter and leave the premises, and such a right is called "a way of necessity." He must exercise reasonable care in selecting his road to the main road, and this road ultimately becomes part of the title to the property.

4. RESTRICTIONS.—The law prescribes restrictions on the use of a right of way or a way of necessity. Thus the purchaser of the farm away from the road could not subdivide it and transfer his right of way to others without permission of the real owner of the way. However, more than one person can claim a right of way. A tenant can never acquire a right of way beyond the duration of his lease.

5. BUILDING RIGHTS.—

a. The owner of a building has no action against one who cuts off his light, air, or view by erecting a building on adjacent land, unless the right has been expressly acquired. The right to light, air, and unobstructed view may sometimes be acquired by deed or by presumption. If the owner has acquired such a right he loses it by tearing down the building and erecting a new one.

b. A person has the right to the lateral support of his land. If, therefore, a neighbor excavates in an unreasonable manner and a building consequently falls down, the owner has an action against the neighbor and any excavator hired by him.

6. WATER RIGHTS.—

a. The water which runs through a person's land may legally be held back for a short time to furnish water power, or it may be used for any other reasonable purpose.

b. Neither a person nor a municipality may dump impurities or sewage into a stream, making the water unfit for use below.

c. As a general rule ditches or obstructions may not be dug either to hinder or to hasten the flow of water from one person's land to another in other than the natural way.

d. A riparian owner has the right to cut and sell ice which forms over the portion of the bed of the stream which he owns, provided he does not interfere with the rights of other owners.

e. A person digging a well cannot be held for cutting off his neighbor's water supply, unless it can be proved that he acted maliciously.

Professional Men

1. DOCTORS.—A doctor or physician is a person who has (1) been educated in the science of medicine and surgery, (2) been graduated from a medical college, (3) passed the state medical examination, and (4) been licensed by the state to practice his profession.

2. CONFIDENTIAL DISCLOSURES.—It frequently happens that a doctor is called upon to give expert testimony in a civil or criminal case. He is not, however, required or permitted to divulge on the witness stand any confidential statement or information obtained in his professional relationship with his patient.

3. LIABILITY.—A doctor is not legally liable for the success or failure of his treatment in the absence of an express contract. He is required to exercise the greatest care, diligence, and skill in his work, and can be held criminally liable only for carelessness and gross inefficiency. The crime of malpractice consists of any injurious or improper treatment.

4. LAWYERS.—A lawyer is a person who has (1) been educated in the science of law, (2) been graduated from a law school (in some states), and (3) passed the state bar examination. Every man is entitled by law to have a lawyer represent him in his trial, but the court will furnish the services of a lawyer only in criminal cases.

5. CONFIDENTIAL DISCLOSURES.—What has already been said about the confidential relationship existing between doctors and patients, applies even more strongly to attorneys and their clients. The matters spoken of between them are confidential and no law can force the lawyer to divulge them on the witness stand.

6. LIENS.—An attorney has a lien for the payment of his fee on all documents, moneys and other things coming into his possession.

7. LIABILITY.—A lawyer cannot be held liable for the failure of his case unless he did not exercise reasonable care and judgment.

Sale and Transfer of Property

1. DEFINITION.—A sale is the exchange of property for a consideration called the price, which is either to be paid at once or at some future date. An agreement to sell at a future date is called an executory sale. A present sale is called an executed sale. A sale may be made either in writing or orally.

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES A SALE.—

a. Sales are based on mutual agreement.

b. Either the thing sold must exist at the time of the sale or there must be reason to believe that it will be in existence and in possession of the seller. For example: If a man sold a horse for $100 and the horse died before the actual time of the sale the transaction would not be a sale.

- c. Grain or other produce not yet sowed or planted can be sold because the seller may reasonably expect a crop. Machinery or other manufactured goods may be sold before they are made and the seller can be held to perform his part of the contract as though the articles actually existed at the time of the sale.
- d. The thing sold must be specified and set apart as the property of the buyer in order to complete the sale.
- e. When nothing is said as to the time of payment when the sale is made, the law presumes that the property must be paid for before the purchaser can secure possession. If credit is agreed upon, the buyer is entitled to immediate possession.
- f. When goods are sold "on sale or return" the title passes to the purchaser immediately, but may go back to the seller if the goods are returned within the time specified in the agreement.
- g. If goods are sold on approval, the title passes to the buyer when he signifies his approval or when he keeps them beyond the time set for their return.
- h. When no price is fixed in the agreement, the purchaser must pay a reasonable price.
- i. Goods are often sold and shipped subject to bill of lading, that is, payment is not made until the goods are delivered. Thus the seller controls the property until it is paid for, although the title may pass to the buyer.

3. STATUTE OF FRAUDS.—The Uniform Sales Act provides that a contract to sell $500.00 worth of goods or more, cannot be enforced:

- a. unless the purchaser advances a sum of money to bind the bargain, or
- b. unless the purchaser accepts a part of the goods, or
- c. unless the contract is in writing.

This rule, of course, does not apply when the goods sold are to be manufactured especially for the buyer and would not be readily salable to others.

4. RELIEVING THE BUYER.—The buyer's obligation is limited in various ways. For instance, the contract may be voided:

- a. if the goods purchased have been damaged or destroyed before delivery;
- b. if in his own opinion the goods are not satisfactory.

5. WARRANTIES.—When goods are sold there are certain warranties by the seller which may be either expressed or implied. Any statement made by the seller tending to induce the buyer to purchase is an express warranty. In every sale there are implied warranties, (1) that the seller has the title to the property, and (2) that the goods will correspond with the description or sample. Any defects which can be seen in property when sold do not relieve the buyer from meeting his contract though he claims that he did not see the defects. The law does not furnish eyes for the purchaser of property. But defects in property which cannot be seen and of which the seller makes no statement release the buyer from his contract.

6. THE BULK SALES LAW is a part of the law of many states. It provides that when a stock of goods or merchandise is sold, transferred or consigned in bulk, the seller's creditors must be notified in writing a certain number of days before the sale is completed. Thus when a merchant sells his merchandise in bulk, the buyer should keep the following considerations in mind: First, he should demand a bill of sale. Second, he should either demand an affidavit from the seller that he has notified the creditors, or secure a sworn list of the creditors and notify them himself. This law applies to corporations, partnerships, and individuals; and any attempt to evade its provisions carries with it a penalty of a fine, a year's imprisonment, or both. If the creditors are not properly notified they can hold the purchaser liable for the debts.

7. STOCK MARKET SPECULATION.—Trading in stocks, grains, and cotton, together with the buying and selling of futures, is now largely regulated by statute. A contract of this kind which involves the actual delivery of property is perfectly legal, even if at the time the sale was made, the seller did not own the property sold. However, when no exchange of property is ever contemplated and the parties merely propose to effect a settlement based on the market changes, the contract is not legal.

Form of Bill of Sale

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That I, of County in consideration of six hundred ($600) dollars to me in hand paid by of the same place, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do hereby grant, sell, assign, transfer, and deliver unto the said his heirs and assigns, the following goods and chattels, to wit:

Four Yearling Heifers, at $50.00 each	$200.00
30 head of Sheep, at $4.00 each	120.00
Five sets of Harness, at $20.00 each	100.00
Two Farm Wagons, at $35.00 each	70.00
One Corn Planter, at $20.00	20.00
Six Plows, at $15.00 each	90.00

To have and to hold all of the said goods and chattels to the said, his heirs and assigns forever. And I do hereby covenant to and with the said that I am the legal owner of said goods and chattels; that they are free and clear from all other and prior sales and incumbrances; that I have good right to sell and convey the same as aforesaid, and that in the peaceable possession of the said I will forever warrant and defend the same against the lawful claims and demands of all persons whomsoever.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 29th day of June, A.D. 19....

In the presence of

Note: In selling or buying automobiles, especially used cars, it is always wise to insert the name of the machine, its model, the engine number, the car number, also the type of car, its color, and any other information which will help to identify it.

Shipping

1. REGISTRATION.—The law requires all ships flying the United States flag to be registered. A ship engaged in foreign trade must be registered with the collector of customs in the district in which her home port is situated. This formality is called enrollment in the case of large ships engaged in coastwise or internal commerce, and license for smaller ships.

2. OWNERSHIP.—Vessels may be owned by individuals, partnerships, or corporations, and the ownership may be acquired either by purchase or construction. If several individuals own a ship, they are tenants in common where there is no other relation between the part owners of a vessel than that arising out of joint ownership. Each part owner has his share of the profits and expenses, and no one individual can bind the others except for the necessary maintenance of the ship. When a partnership or corporation owns a vessel, the ordinary rules of corporations and partnership apply.

3. SALE.—The owner of a ship can sell or mortgage his interest at any time, but in order to effect a good title against third parties the contract should be in writing. If a ship is sold while it is at sea, the buyer takes it subject to all contracts made by the master before learning of the sale. In all other cases the buyer is not liable for repairs made or supplies furnished previous to the sale.

4. MARITIME LOANS.—In cases of great emergency, for example when a ship is in a foreign port without funds to purchase necessary supplies, a master can secure a maritime loan, in which the vessel is put up as security. If the vessel fails to reach home, the lender loses his money, but in the event of a safe arrival, he has the boat as security and can hold the master personally. Such a contract calls for a high rate of interest but is perfectly legal. The technical name for the contract is "contract of bottomry."

5. THE MASTER of a vessel is the chief officer. The law gives him authority to bind the owners for necessary repairs or supplies. He must render accurate accounts of his actions and money received, but his first duty is to the passengers and the crew. He has the power to regulate their actions in any manner which is necessary to their safety, comfort, and good order. If on account of illness, insanity, or other reason, the master is unable to perform his duties properly, they pass to the lower officers in the order of their rank.

6. THE SEAMEN.—Statutes and maritime law generally require the execution of shipping papers between the master and the seamen before starting on a voyage to a foreign country or from one state to another. These articles must specify:

- a. the exact nature of the voyage.
- b. the destination.
- c. the duration.
- d. the amount of wages to be paid each seaman.

If shipping articles are not properly executed, or if the master violates the contract, the seaman can leave the ship and recover the highest rate of wages, his expenses home, and damages. On the other hand a seaman may be discharged for reasons which show him to be unfit for the service or to be trusted in the vessel, such as:

- a. long continued disobedience.
- b. drunkenness.
- c. incapacity (due to his own conduct).

7. COURTS OF ADMIRALTY have jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, torts, injuries, or offenses.

Statutes of Limitation

1. DEFINITION.—A statute of limitation is a law which specifies the time in which debts or actions are outlawed. All states have such laws providing different periods of time, varying from one to twenty years, within which legal actions must be brought, before the courts are closed to them.

2. THE TIME BEGINS TO RUN as soon as the debt is incurred or, in accounts, from the date of the last purchase or from the time of the injury complained of. The debt may be renewed by a partial payment of principal or interest, or by a written acknowledgment in a note or paper, with an expressed willingness to pay indicated.

Torts or Wrongs

1. DEFINITION.—A tort is a private or civil wrong or injury arising independent of contract. The proper remedy is an action for damages.

2. TORTS AND CRIMES.—There is a distinction between torts and crimes. If a wrongful act violates a private right it is a tort; if it violates a public right it is a crime. Very frequently the wrongful act is in violation of both private and public rights. In such cases, even if the wrong-doer makes personal restitution or settlement with the person wronged, the state still has the right to punish the wrong-doer for the crime. Suppose A steals $500 from B who finds it out and succeeds in getting A to return the money. "A" has still committed a crime against the public and can be punished as the law provides.

3. VIOLATION OF CONTRACT.—Contracts frequently contain clauses fixing the amount of damages for breach of the contract. Such a clause is called a "liquidated damages" clause. If the clause is reasonable and does not amount to a penalty, it will be upheld by the courts.

4. ASSAULT AND BATTERY.—A person who intentionally invades the person of another by physical contact (or puts him in apprehension of an invasion of his person by threat of immediate physical contact) without such person's consent, and not in reasonable defense of person or other interest, and not in the performance of some duty imposed by law, or the exercise of some privilege by reason of the relation of the parties, is liable in damages. A successful assault becomes a battery when the injury is actually done.

- a. Every person is entitled by law to liberty, security of life, and security of his property.
- b. Mere words do not constitute an assault.
- c. The wrong consists not so much in the actual striking of the person as in the manner and spirit of the act.
- d. Accidental injury is not a battery.
- e. A blow unlawfully aimed at one person but striking another is a battery.
- f. Reasonable methods of self defense may be employed in resisting a battery and in defending a member of one's family, or property.
- g. A school teacher has the right to require obedience to reasonable rules, and proper attention to his authority, and to inflict punishment for disobedience. Hence, reasonable punishment, having in mind the age, size, and physical condition of the pupil, is not a battery.

5. DEFAMATION.—A defamation is a false and malicious imputation of bad character or reputation either by slander or by libel.

- a. Every person has a right to his good reputation.
- b. Every person is assumed to have a good reputation until the contrary is proved.
- c. Slander is oral defamation.
- d. Libel is defamation in writing or printing.

6. SLANDER.—In simple words this tort consists of speaking words in another's hearing which injure a third person's reputation. The United States Supreme Court has classified slanderous words which are objectionable:

- a. Words falsely spoken of a person which impute to the party the commission of some criminal offense involving moral turpitude for which the party, if the charge is true, may be indicted and punished.
- b. Words falsely spoken of a person which impute that the party is infected with some infectious disease, which, if the charge is true, would exclude the party from society.
- c. Defamatory words spoken of a party which impute to the party unfitness to perform the duties of an office or employment for profit, or the want of integrity in the discharge of the duties of such an office or employment.
- d. Defamatory words falsely spoken of a party which prejudice such party in his or her profession or trade.
- e. Defamatory words falsely spoken of a person, which, though not in themselves actionable, occasion the party special damage.

7. LIBEL.—It is even more dangerous to defame a person's character in writing. Many words when written or printed are libelous, which if spoken would not be slanderous without proof of special injury.

- a. The owners of books and newspapers generally are liable for the publication of libelous matter, though made without their knowledge and even against their orders.
- b. Newsdealers are immune from any liability for selling or displaying newspapers or magazines which contain libelous matter, providing such dealers have no knowledge of the libelous matter.
- c. In order to hold the editor or proprietor of the printing plant it must be proved that the libelous matter could be recognized by an intelligent person as libel.

8. THE DEFENSES are given below:

- a. The truth of the charge generally is a complete defense against an action for damages. Statutes, however, sometimes require that not only must the words be true, but they must be uttered in good faith.

- b. A privileged communication, such as what is said or written in a judicial proceeding or in a legitimate newspaper report thereof, is not held to be libelous matter. This privilege extends to the heads of the executive departments of government. Statements rendered by mercantile agencies, and the reports of many semi-public societies are also conditionally privileged.
- c. Fair comment is still another defense. The conduct of public men is held to be a proper matter for public discussion, so long as the writer keeps within the bounds of an honest intention to discharge a duty to the public, and does not make the occasion a mere cover for false allegations. The same rule applies to newspaper reports of literary or artistic productions offered to the public.

9. FALSE IMPRISONMENT is a crime and the person unlawfully imprisoned has a civil action for damages. The defense may be that the officer was clothed with the proper authority, and in the case of parent and child, guardian and ward, or teacher and pupil it may be shown that the alleged wrongdoer was acting within his duty.

10. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION is another wrong. This is the malicious instituting of suit without probable cause, and both the malice and the lack of probable cause must be proved. A suit to recover for this wrong cannot be commenced before the alleged malicious prosecution has come to an end. That the party acted on the advice of his attorney after a full and fair disclosure of the facts is a good defense.

11. CONSPIRACY.—A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful end which is injurious to another. Thus a trade union may lawfully agree that they will stop work, or that they will not work with certain other laborers, but they commit a wrong as soon as they interfere with the liberty of others. Employers combined to use unlawful methods to exclude a certain class of workmen, are also guilty of a wrong. An agreement among manufacturers that they will all operate as the majority agree may be a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

12. RELIGIOUS LIBERTY is guaranteed to every man by the constitution. The law does not interfere with religious societies unless they wrongfully expel a member or otherwise break the laws.

13. SEARCH AND SEIZURE.—It is unlawful to search private premises unless a search warrant has been issued by proper authority.

It is a criminal offense to open another's letters, or to retain or pry into them. The Federal and state constitutions protect persons against unreasonable searches and seizures.

14. NUISANCES.—A nuisance is anything wrongfully done or permitted which injures or annoys another in the enjoyment of his legal rights. Below is a list of some of the nuisances subject to an action in tort:

- a. To remove or weaken the lateral support of the adjoining land.
- b. To mine or tunnel under another's land without providing suitable support.
- c. To extend buildings over another's land.
- d. To allow filthy deposits to accumulate on one's property.
- e. To deposit refuse in a stream of water.
- f. To erect a dam, backing up the water to injure the land of another.
- g. To use or care for explosives, loaded weapons, or dangerous machines in a negligent manner.
- h. To conduct a place of business or amusement, or engage in any activity, in a way that will materially interfere with the ordinary physical comfort of others.
- i. To allow poisonous or offensive materials to remain in a place where they may cause injury to others.
- j. To put or allow a heavy article or substance to remain where it is likely to fall and injure persons or property.
- k. To erect, operate, and maintain electrical appliances without reasonable care in proportion to their danger.
- l. For a state, county, or municipality to allow defects in streets, highways, or sidewalks which result in injury to persons or property.

Trademarks

1. DEFINITION.—A trademark is an emblem or symbol to designate the goods of a merchant or manufacturer.

2. REGISTRATION.—The owner of a trademark may have it registered in the U.S. Patent Office and thus acquire the right to keep others from using it.

3. STEPS NECESSARY TO SECURE REGISTRATION.—The first step is to file or sign an application addressed to the Commissioner of Patents. This must include:

- a. the name, domicile, location, and citizenship of applicant.
- b. description of the goods for which trademark is used.
- c. method of affixing trademark.
- d. length of time the trademark has been used.
- e. description of trademark.
- f. drawing and specimens of the trademark.

The next step is the payment of the sum of $25.00 for registration.

4. REGISTER.—There are two registers of the U.S. Patent Office on which trademarks may be registered. To be registered on the Principal Register, the trademark must be coined, arbitrary, fanciful, or suggestive; these are usually called technical marks. If the trademark is merely descriptive of goods or their regional origin or is primarily a surname, it is placed on the Supplemental Register.

5. LENGTH OF TIME A TRADEMARK IS PROTECTED.—The registration of a trademark remains in force for twenty years. It may be renewed for a period of twenty years if it is still used in trade regulated by the U.S. Congress. The fee for renewal is $25.00. A trademark may be canceled or surrendered. It is canceled if within one year next preceding the expiration of six years from the date of registration the applicant fails to file an affidavit that he is using the mark or showing reason for nonuse. Unless the affidavit is filed, the registration is canceled after six years.

6. RESTRICTIONS.—The law has placed certain restrictions on the registration of trademarks. For example, it is impossible to register a trademark if:

- a. it comprises immoral, deceptive, or scandalous matter;
- b. it contains matter that may disparage or falsely suggest a connection with persons living or dead;
- c. it contains matter that may disparage or falsely suggest a connection with institutions, beliefs, or national symbols;
- d. it consists of, or includes, the flag or coat of arms or other insignia of the United States, any state, municipality, or foreign nation;
- e. it uses, without his consent, the portrait, signature, or name of a living person, or those of a deceased president of the United States without consent of his widow.

7. REGISTRATION OF OTHER MARKS.—The law provides for the registration of service marks, certification marks, and collective marks. A service mark is defined as a mark "used in the sale or advertising of services to identify the services of one person and distinguish them from the services of others." A certification mark is used to certify origin or quality of goods; an example is a union label. A collective mark is used by an association, such as a cooperative.

8. ADDITIONAL INFORMATION.—A pamphlet, General Information Concerning Trademarks, is available from the U.S. Patent Office, Washington 25, D.C. It describes the way applications and drawings are to be prepared and gives sample forms for applications. The Official Gazette contains information on trademarks registered, renewed, or published for opposition.

Vicious Animals

1. THE OWNER'S RESPONSIBILITY.—The owners of vicious animals are responsible for any injuries they may cause while running at large. If a dog annoys travelers on a public road by scaring horses or frightening children, the owner is responsible in damages to the injured party. The owner of a vicious bull or stallion is required to exercise the greatest care in protecting the public from injury. If a person on a social or business errand is injured by a savage animal on the premises of the owner, the owner is responsible.

2. TRESPASSERS.—These rules do not apply to trespassers who know the dangerous nature of the animal.

3. DOMESTIC ANIMALS.—The owner of domestic animals is responsible in case injury results because of his own negligence. On the other hand, if the animals trespass on a neighbor's land, they cannot be injured or killed by the neighbor. He has a legal remedy, however, and can collect damages.

4. FENCE LAWS.—In certain sections of the country there are open lands where cattle and other animals are allowed to graze at will. The owners of cultivated land are there required to provide their own protection against the animals. Most states, however, have stock laws providing that animals must be kept within an enclosure, and if damage results, the owner of the animals is responsible.

Wills

1. DEFINITIONS.—A will or testament is generally a written instrument making disposition of a person's property, to take effect after his death. A testator is the maker of a will when the same is made by a male person; if a female, the maker is called a testatrix. A codicil is an addition or alteration of a part of an executed will. A legacy is a gift or bequest of money or personal property by will. The person to whom it is given is called a legatee, and if the gift consists of the remainder of the property after paying all debts and other legacies he is called the residuary legatee. A person to whom real estate is given is called a devisee. An executor is a male person named in the will to whom is entrusted the duty of administering the estate of the testator according to the provisions of the will. If the will names a female person, she is called the executrix. An administrator is the male person appointed by the court to administer the estate of a deceased person who did not have a will or if the party named in the will is incompetent or refuses to act. If the party appointed by the court is a female person, she is called the administratrix.

2. WHO MAY MAKE A WILL.—All persons are competent to make a will except infants, persons of unsound mind, and idiots. In like manner any person who is competent to make a will can appoint his own executor. If the person so appointed is legally competent to transact business, the court will confirm the appointment if he lives within the jurisdiction of the court.

3. KINDS OF WILLS.—There are two kinds of wills, written and unwritten. An unwritten will is called nuncupative. Such a will might be made by a soldier in active service or a sailor at sea, and depends upon proof of the persons hearing it.

4. REQUIREMENTS:—

- a. A will should be written.
- b. A will should be dated.
- c. Testator should sign his name in full, by mark if necessary.
- d. It should be witnessed by two or more disinterested parties, the number of witnesses varying according to statutes.
- e. It is not necessary that the witnesses should know the contents of the will. It is generally necessary that the testator acknowledge to them that it is his will, sign it in their presence, and request them to sign as witnesses in his presence and in the presence of each other.
- f. The wishes of the testator should be fully and clearly expressed in the will.
- g. No exact form of words is necessary to make a will.
- h. In writing wills simple language should be used. Statements concerning every provision or condition of the will should be fully and plainly made.
- i. A will is valid even if written with a lead pencil.
- j. A will to be effective in matters pertaining to real estate must be executed according to the laws of the state in which the real estate is located. This requirement is generally in regard to the number of witnesses to a will. Care should be exercised to dispose of all the property belonging to the person making a will. In order to accomplish this, a will should have a clause, "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, I give" etc., or "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate shall be divided into the following parts, $\frac{1}{3}$ to, $\frac{1}{3}$ to," etc.
- k. Personal property may be conveyed in accordance with the law of the state in which the testator resides.
- l. If trust provisions or limited estates are to be provided for in a will, it is best to have the will drawn by a competent lawyer, as these provisions are very technical, and may result in much litigation if not carefully drawn.

- m. Generally a person does not need to give his property or any part of it to his children, but mention of the names of all the children is evidence of the testator's competency.

5. CODICILS.—The same principles apply to a codicil as to a will. It must be signed in the presence of witnesses.

6. MARRIED WOMEN.—A wife is entitled to a certain portion of her husband's property called the dower. If the will does not provide that amount for her, she can have it set aside and claim her dower right.

7. WHEN IS A WILL SET ASIDE?—

- a. When it can be proved that the testator was feeble-minded or lacking in mental capacity.
- b. When the testator revokes it before death. It is usually destroyed.
- c. When the property devised has been disposed of during the testator's lifetime.

8. GENERAL PRINCIPLES:—

- a. Any person may be a devisee or a legatee, including married women, minors, or corporations.
- b. Testator's property is primarily liable for testator's debts and funeral expenses, which must be paid before any part of it can be distributed to legatees.
- c. A will has no force or effect until after testator's death.
- d. The last will annuls all former wills.
- e. A will takes effect from the day of the testator's death.
- f. All matters pertaining to wills and inheritances are handled by the court having probate jurisdiction.

FORM OF WILL

A will to be valid must be in writing and signed at the end by the testator in the presence of at least two witnesses (in some jurisdictions the requirement is three witnesses), who must all be present when the testator signs his name to the will, and the witnesses must also sign their names as such witnesses in the presence of each other and in the presence of the testator. If the will is written on more than one single sheet it is a wise precaution for the testator and all of the witnesses to sign their names on the margin of each sheet.

Will Form

I,, residing in, in the County of, and State of, being of sound mind and disposing memory do make, ordain, publish, and declare this to be my Last Will and Testament, hereby revoking all former Wills and Codicils by me made.

[Here insert all bequests and instructions]

Lastly, I make, constitute, and appoint to be the executor (trix) of this my Last Will and Testament.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my seal the day of, in the year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and [Seal]
Testator's Signature.

This instrument was on the day of the date hereof, signed, published, and declared by the said testator to be his (her) Last Will and Testament in the presence of us who at his (her) request have subscribed our names hereto as witnesses, in his (her) presence, and in the presence of each other.

INFORMATION FOR EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS

An executor is named in a will to execute that will and settle the estate. If the will does not name an executor, or if named, he will not or cannot act, the Probate Court (in some states called the Surrogate, in others Orphans' Court) appoints an "administrator with the will annexed." If a person dies without leaving a will, the court appoints an administrator, whose duty is the same as that of an executor, except that he, having no will of the deceased, distributes the property as the law directs.

The duties of an executor are: First: To see that the deceased is suitably buried, avoiding unreasonable expense if the estate is insolvent. Second: To offer the will for probate, or proving; to conform to the laws of his state and rules of the court, the clerk of which will give full instructions. Third: To make and return to the court within required time an inventory of the property. Real estate lying in another state need not be inventoried, for that must be administered upon in the state where it lies; but personal property situated in another state should be inventoried. If the real estate is encumbered, it should be described. Fourth: To collect the property, pay the debts and dispose of the remainder as the law and will, or either, directs. Generally the debts should be paid as follows: 1. Funeral expenses. 2. Expenses of last sickness. 3. Debts due the United States. 4. Debts due the state. 5. Claims of creditors. Fifth: To render the accounts as directed by the court.

The law provides that the widow of the intestate shall be the first entitled to act as administrator; next, the nearest of kin who are competent; next, any creditor who will accept the trust; and lastly, any other suitable person.

Executors and administrators are required to take an official oath; also to give bond, which is usually for double the amount of the estate.

Generally speaking, any blanks for probate may be secured from the clerk of the court having probate jurisdiction.

MONEY AND BANKING

Under a banking system such as that in the United States where hundreds of millions of dollars change hands every day, it is only natural that huge losses occur. Some of them are direct—actual monetary losses in dollars and cents. Others are indirect, resulting in the loss of reputation, the lowering of credit standings, or the inability to grasp an opportunity when it presents itself. Most of them could be prevented.

Banking Losses

Banking losses are of two kinds: those due to carelessness and those resulting from ignorance of ordinary banking laws and customs. If every individual were as careful about money matters as he should be, and if he knew and understood the fundamental principles of money and banking, losses would be much smaller than they are.

LOSSES DUE TO CARELESSNESS

Let us consider first of all the careless things people do in connection with their banking business. How do they write checks? How do they endorse them? How do they handle canceled vouchers? What about overdrafts? Why is it that some people have no bank account whatever? These and countless other questions must be considered if we are to avoid unnecessary loss.

Every banker knows that at least 50% of the checks passing through his hands could be raised or altered by the clumsiest amateur. The only reason more of them are not changed is that there are not more dishonest people in the world.

LIABILITY

Many persons believe that after making out a check payable to a firm or individual, writing in the amount, and affixing the signature, their responsibility ceases. But such is not law. One of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States reads: "Your bank is responsible for the signature on your check, but not for what is written in the body of the check, and money paid in good faith and without negligence on an altered check, cannot be recovered by the maker thereof." Espey vs. Cinni Bank, 18 Wall, U. S. 118.

HOW CHECKS ARE ALTERED

There are several methods by which a dishonest man can alter a check to his personal advantage. In the first place there are simple pen changes, which include many combinations that can be made by a careful study of the handwriting. For example, one to eight—one to eighty—one hundred to eight hundred—one thousand to eight thousand, etc. The employees of a bank are not mind readers and will consequently pay the check if there is no evidence of fraud.

It is a comparatively simple matter to apply an acid and wipe off every written word or figure except the signature on a common white check. On colored checks the fine lines of the signature are covered up until after the acid bath, leaving the check perfectly white. Any convenient name and amount may then be written in. Even when safety paper (so called) is used, checks are altered every day. The professional check raiser has considerable knowledge of chemicals enabling him to alter checks, drafts, letters of credit, and registered bonds. He is also something of an artist. For instance, if the payee's name on a safety check is to be changed, he delicately traces out the name with his acid, and then with a fine camel's hair brush he can restore the most delicate tints, leaving a perfect safety check for his own purposes. Thus no bank safety paper is a protection against him.

The largest percentage of loss from altered checks occurs from changing the payee's name. Large checks are seldom raised, but the payee's name is changed to "bearer" or "cash." Many names permit of changing by adding a letter or a syllable, or a few pen strokes. Thus, F. C. AHRENS is changed to F. C. AHRENSON by simply adding the letters "on."

CHECK PROTECTORS

The first mechanical device for protecting the amount of checks was one which crimped the paper over the numerical amount of the check. This was followed by a machine which punched the numerical amount of the check through the paper. Next came the machine stamping the words "Not over $000 dollars." Check-protecting manufacturers then produced a great variety of machines which wrote or stamped the amount in words in colored ink, as well as machines which stamped the amount in numerals. Such machines were generally accepted as insurance against alteration, and are still so considered by many people.

The skill of the criminal, however, kept pace with the inventive genius of the manufacturer. He soon learned that it was a simple matter to iron out the crimped surface of the check and to paste on little discs of paper or apply tinted chalk when the check was perforated. In the case of machines which stamped the words "Not more than $000" in indelible ink he discovered a means of erasing the indelible ink and stamping in a greater amount by the aid of a similar device. With the invention of an instrument which broke up and disturbed the surface of the paper the criminal was forced to seek another method of fraud and he found it in the practice of changing the payee's name to bearer or to cash. Because of the fact that these check protectors do not permit of writing a large amount, the professional criminal cleverly devised the scheme of taking a small check reading:

THIRTY-FOUR DOLLARS FIFTY CENTS

and writing a larger amount above these words on a similar machine so that the check reads:

ONE THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED AND
THIRTY-FOUR DOLLARS FIFTY CENTS

The paying teller can see at a glance that it would be impossible to write the whole amount on one line so he pays the check without questioning it.

The modern check protector accomplishes three things. First, it macerates the amount line and prints the amount in indelible ink into this broken paper surface. In the second place, it prints the words at such an angle that the very largest amounts can all be written on one line and in the proper place. And finally, it so macerates the payee's name that it cannot be successfully altered to bearer, cash, or another name.

Rules for Writing Checks

- a. A check should be made payable "to the order of" a specific person, never to bearer.
- b. Write figures plainly with ink, never with pencil.
- c. Be sure that the amount in figures corresponds with the written amount. The bank will always pay the written amount.
- d. Write the amount of the check as far to the left as possible so that no additional words or figures can be inserted.
- e. Fill in the space remaining with a heavy black line so that nothing can be added.
- f. Exercise the utmost care in writing and handing out checks. The person who carelessly draws a check must stand any loss which may occur through its alteration.
- g. Remember that a check is your order to the bank to pay out money, and that it is necessary for the bank to know without question when, to whom, and how much it shall pay.
- h. Use the best known mechanical methods of protecting your check against alteration.

The habit of endorsing checks in blank should be discouraged for more than one reason. If you endorse a check by simply signing your name across the back of it, that endorsement has the effect of making the check payable to any holder, or to the bearer. If it is lost or stolen, it is as valuable to the finder or thief as the actual currency would be. Many business men make a practice of endorsing their checks in blank and carrying them to the bank for deposit. Suppose there is a hold-up or that in the excitement of an accident or a fire on the way to the bank, the checks disappear. The unfortunate owner has little chance of getting the money back. Again by endorsing a check you vouch for its genuineness in every respect. Thus, if you endorse in blank and permit the check to come into the hands of a forger who afterward raises the amount, you have made yourself liable for the larger amount. Always endorse a check payable to some specific person or firm. If the checks are intended for deposit, write across the back the words: "For Deposit in First National Bank" or "For Deposit Only" and sign your name.

KEEPING RECORDS

When a man puts money into a bank, his deposits and withdrawals are all carefully recorded by an efficient system of modern bookkeeping. However, the individual does not always exercise the same great care in keeping his own accounts. As a result he allows his account to be overdrawn, injuring his credit with the bank, or he issues checks when he has no money in the bank thus lowering his credit standing with his creditors.

One check coming back marked "Not sufficient funds" will do more damage to a man's credit than a dozen past due accounts and may destroy a commercial reputation it has taken years to establish.

A depositor should call at the bank for his statement and vouchers every month. He should also check the bank statement with his own check book in order to avoid errors, detect strange checks, and save confusion and loss of time.

The following practices should be observed:

a. Always keep a correct record, on the stubs of your check book, of all deposits and checks.

b. See that you receive all checks charged to you on the bank statement, and arrange them in order.

c. Check off stubs for all checks returned with your statement, also verify deposits shown in your pass book with those shown on the statement.

d. To the balance shown on the last stub used on which this statement is balanced, add the amounts of all checks shown on the unchecked stubs, that is, the amount of outstanding or unpaid checks.

e. The total should agree with the balance shown by the bank. Report any differences immediately.

Value of a Bank Account

Although the number of bank accounts in the United States averages more than one for every person in the country yet there are thousands of people who do not take advantage of the convenience and safety which banks offer for the handling of money. There are four distinct ways in which the man who has no bank account is likely to lose. In the first place, when a check, a pass book, a certificate of deposit, or a bank draft is lost or stolen, the owner has some chance to recover, but when the cash is gone, it is usually gone forever. Secondly, the lack of a bank account naturally leads to a lack of credit. The man without enough money to warrant a bank account has a decided limit placed on his buying power. Thirdly, the man who has no banking acquaintance is always subject to inconvenience and delay when he wishes to cash a check or a bank draft sent to him from another person. And, in the last place, it very often happens that a young man going into business is denied the financial help he needs from the bank for the single reason that he is unable to show any satisfactory savings balance or other visible evidence of his character and habits. Thus the man who has no bank account runs the grave risk of losing money, credit, time, and opportunity.

The holder of a check should present it for payment within a reasonable time after he receives it. He may keep it as long as he pleases, but if in the meantime the bank fails, he cannot demand payment again from the maker. The law provides that the check should be presented at the bank for payment or forwarded by mail for collection on the same day it is received or not later than the day following. Again, a man's death automatically stops payment on all his outstanding checks. In other words, if a man dies before you have deposited his check, the bank will refuse to cash it and you will be obliged to wait for your money until his estate is settled. It is a matter of safety, therefore, to deposit all checks without any unreasonable delay.

It is sometimes desirable for two persons to deposit money in their joint names, payable to either or both signatures. A joint account of man and wife subject to withdrawals by either during their lifetime, and by the survivor in event of the death of the other, is often a very wise arrangement. But in those states having an inheritance tax it may not be generally known that if one party to a joint account dies, the other is not permitted to draw out the money until the state treasurer or other authority has been notified of the death, and given his consent to the withdrawal. The same laws govern the actions of a bank or trust company having in its possession a safety deposit box of a deceased person. This box may not be removed or opened by friends or relatives until the proper state official has checked its contents and given his release. Thus it frequently happens that at a time when ready funds are most needed, the cumbersome processes of the law cause uncertainty and delay.

FUNCTIONS OF A BANK

To many individuals, a bank is nothing more than an elaborately furnished building with a lot of dignified individuals sitting around at mahogany desks, trying to look wise, and an immense safety vault filled with gold and currency. To many others, a bank is merely a convenient place in which to get a check cashed. Few really understand the internal organization of a bank, or know its real functions. As a result of this lack of understanding, the banks are unable to perform the services they otherwise might. Here briefly are the real functions of a bank:

a. To provide a safe place for the custody of money and other valuables.

b. To lend money for legitimate purposes.

c. To facilitate the transmission of funds by drafts, or bills of exchange.

d. To encourage thrift.

e. To act in an advisory capacity on matters of an economic or financial nature.

A banker primarily is a dealer in money. He borrows of one party and lends to another. The difference between the terms at which he borrows and those at which he lends, forms the source of his profit. By this means he draws into active operation those small sums of money which were previously unproductive in the hands of private individuals, and at the same time furnishes accommodation to those in need of additional capital for carrying on their commercial transactions. Anything that the banker can do to encourage thrift and improve methods of business among his customers, automatically increases his deposits and swells his profits. In banking, therefore, as in any other business, real service means success, not only for the bank individually, but for the community it serves.

A bank, therefore, means a place where you can leave your money in safety; a place in which to borrow money if you need it for some legitimate purpose; a place where you can purchase a draft or bill of exchange that will be legal tender in every country in the world; a place to learn the advantages of saving; and a place to turn to when you are in need of information, advice, or assistance in your business affairs.

Federal Reserve System

The Federal Reserve System consists of twelve regional Federal Reserve banks. All national banks are required to become members of the system; state banks may, if eligible. The member banks form the capital stock of their district Reserve bank by subscribing six per cent of their capital, three per cent of which is paid in; they receive a six per cent dividend on the stock which they hold in the Federal Reserve Bank. The system is controlled by a Federal Reserve Board with supervisory powers, and by boards of directors for the regional banks.

The chief purpose of the Federal Reserve System is to accumulate a reserve that can be used as a basis for loans in time of temporary or seasonal need. Each member bank deposits a part of its deposits in its district Reserve Bank, and can borrow from the Reserve Bank to satisfy changes in currency and credit demand. Loans made by member banks may be discounted and sent to the Federal Reserve Bank, where they are rediscounted on the basis of the member bank's collateral notes. The notes may not be lent for investment purposes or for trading in any securities other than those of the United States government. By raising or lowering the rediscount rate, the district bank attempts to regulate the flow of credit. The Reserve Banks also attempt to regulate credit by purchases and sales of government securities and other paper in the open market.

Bank Statements

Many people who have no knowledge of accounting, feel that they can not understand a bank statement, and therefore pay no attention to it. This is a mistake. Every person who has money on deposit, either in a savings or checking account ought to know the condition of his bank, and how its condition compares with that of other banks. Below is a simple statement of a moderate-sized national bank, together with an analysis of the various items:

Resources

Cash on Hand and
Due from Banks	$201,568.71
Loans and Discounts	964,393.37

and Interest	2,135.62
	$1,723,512.08

By resources is meant what the bank owns. Let us consider each resource as it appears:

CASH ON HAND AND DUE FROM BANKS

This item represents the actual cash on hand in the bank, the money which the bank has on deposit with the Federal Reserve or correspondent banks, and checks deposited for collection which are drawn on other banks. Banks usually keep a considerable sum on deposit with other banks, in order that they may draw drafts against that money, when necessary.

LOANS AND DISCOUNTS

This represents the value of the promissory notes of the firms or individuals who have borrowed money from the bank. The interest from the loans constitutes the main source of the bank's income. When you apply for a loan your request is passed on by the officers of the bank or a discount committee appointed for that purpose, whose business it is to see that the bank is properly safeguarded in giving you the money.

BONDS AND OTHER SECURITIES

This sum represents the value of such bonds or other securities as the bank has invested in. High grade bonds make a very desirable investment for surplus funds because of their safety and because they can be sold advantageously on short notice, at a price quoted every day. Bonds of the United States government, bonds of large industrial corporations, and state and municipal securities are also held, in varying amounts.

BANKING HOUSE

Under this head there is included the cost of the ground, building, furniture and fixtures used by the bank in carrying on its transactions. This is valuable property owned by the bank.

STOCK IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANK

All member banks in the Federal Reserve System must own a block of stock in their district reserve bank, equal to 6% of their combined capital and surplus.

LIABILITIES

By liabilities we mean the things that the bank owes. Every dollar paid into the bank immediately becomes a liability. The earnings belong to the stockholders, hence are liabilities. A deposit of money is recorded as a resource, but it really belongs to the depositor and must be included among the liabilities. In this particular statement the liabilities of the bank are shown under six different headings:

CAPITAL STOCK

When a bank is organized the stockholders pay in a certain amount of money to protect the depositors. This is called the capital or the capital stock of the bank. It is shown as a liability, because the bank is indebted to the stockholders for what money they pay in. In other words, the stockholders are the owners of the bank. If, however, the bank fails or is unable to pay its depositors, the capital may be used. In addition the stockholders in national banks and in some state banks are personally liable for an equal amount, if it is needed to pay the debts. Deposits are now insured up to a certain amount by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

SURPLUS

A national bank is required by law to accumulate from its profits a fund which will equal 20% of its capital. This is called the surplus fund. Many banks of course accumulate a fund much larger than 20% of their capital. The surplus is also a liability because it belongs to the shareholders, but it remains in the bank as part of the working capital.

UNDIVIDED PROFITS

The undivided profits account represents earnings which have neither been added to the surplus nor paid out in dividends. The size of this account varies with the earnings and when it is large enough, it is transferred to the surplus account. A well managed bank never pays out all its profits in dividends.

DEMAND AND TIME DEPOSITS

Money deposited with a bank in a checking account is a demand deposit. The savings accounts on which interest is paid are time deposits. The bank owes its patrons for all these deposits and must be prepared to meet their demands.

REDISCOUNTS AND MONEY BORROWED

It frequently happens that a bank must borrow money from other banks in order to accommodate its customers. This is done by putting up good security as collateral for the loan, or in the case of a member bank in the Federal Reserve System, by rediscounting commercial paper as explained above. These loans being debts owed by the bank must be shown as direct or contingent liabilities.

RESERVE FOR TAXES AND INTEREST

Instead of carrying a large sum of money as undivided profits, most banks set up a reserve fund for the payment of taxes, interest, bad debts and other necessary expenditures. As the payments are made, they are charged against this account. Thus the bank avoids creating a wrong impression in the published statements it makes.

The law requires banks to submit statements to the proper authorities and to publish them regularly in local newspapers. This is in addition to the official examination to which all banks are subject by national or state bank examiners, clearing house officials, or reserve bank examiners. The published statements, if fully understood, will give depositors an accurate idea of the standing of their bank. By learning to read between the lines you will soon discover that what at first appears to be only a formidable and uninteresting column of figures, is in reality very simple and instructive.

CREDITS AND COLLECTIONS

Many businesses find it essential to do their customers the convenience and courtesy of extending them credit. However, the question of when and how to extend credit and how and when to collect overdue accounts, presents some difficulties. The firm that is haphazard, thoughtless, and over-generous in extending credit finds itself overwhelmed by bad debts. Suspiciousness, reluctance, and stinginess, on the other hand, offend reputable customers and break down good will.

The aim of every business man should be to keep his losses as near the zero point as possible without needlessly limiting sales. In order to accomplish this result, a person of good judgment must be in charge of and responsible for credits. In large concerns there is a credit man. In the vast majority of cases, however, this duty falls on the shoulders of the proprietor himself, or on one of the officers of the corporation. Slipshod methods of extending credit should never be permitted. They sap the very life blood of the business.

Sources of Credit Information

Where the trade is local the man in charge of credits needs to know all there is to know about the character, habits, and financial condition of the purchasers. Theoretically the same thing ought to be true when a house sells its goods over an extended territory, but for practical purposes he must content himself with such general information as is available, coupled with an exact knowledge of the general financial situation in the territory covered. Every possible effort should be made to learn the particular hazards and peculiarities of the customer's business. On the other hand the credit man must be thoroughly familiar with stock on hand, production costs, and all the operative details of his own business. In addition to all these other considerations, a familiarity with the laws of finance, collection, exemption, bankruptcy, and commercial paper is absolutely essential.

How is the credit man to obtain all this vital information? Government reports show up the light and dark spots in the general financial condition of different parts of the country. And as for the reputation, habits, and financial standing of individual customers, the credit man has four different sources of information open to him, namely: the mercantile agencies, local banks, trade reports, and salesmen's reports.

The mercantile agencies attempt to show the net worth and the credit standing of every corporation, partnership, or individual doing business. While their reports are not always accurate and must be qualified by past experience and other available information, they nevertheless are an invaluable source of credit information, and give business men a great inducement to keep their commercial records clean. It must always be remembered, however, that changes in personnel, location, and credit standing, change in these listings at the rate of well over 50% every year.

Many business houses prefer to get their credit information from local sources, such as the bankers or the attorneys in the customer's city. These are always valuable to verify the reports of the mercantile agencies, but as sources of original information they are not always reliable. Delay, partiality, enmity, inaccuracy, or indifference in answering the requests for information, result far too frequently. Most banks refuse to give out credit ratings unless the individual happens to be one of its own customers.

Credit men in the same or allied lines of business often exchange credit information. Manufacturers of certain products sometimes form an association and co-operate in the manufacture and sale of their goods. The members of such an organization are always glad to exchange credit information. Some of these even go so far as to maintain what is known as a black list containing the name and address of firms which are not reliable, and every credit man has a copy of that list.

Firms which employ salesmen to sell their products are in a position to get definite and reliable information on their customers. The salesman makes frequent visits, becomes acquainted with the customer, knows his reputation, observes his method of transacting business and is able to supply first hand reports not only on the customers, but on the general condition of the trade in the city and surrounding country. It does not pay to depend altogether on his reports, however, because his zeal for increased commissions might lead him to ignore the usual danger signals.

Methods of Collecting Accounts

The granting of credit automatically gives rise to the problem of collecting overdue accounts. Even though every reasonable effort is made to secure accurate credit ratings, there will be slow or doubtful accounts. In a vigorous, forward-looking business this is inevitable, since customers are trusted and given the benefit of the doubt wherever possible.

When an account is not paid, it is unwise to resort to law—often a tedious and expensive process—or to forceful, unfriendly methods of dunning, except as a last resource. Every possible concession must be made to avoid litigation, if there seems to be any possibility of a friendly settlement and continued business relations. Non-payment of accounts is by no means evidence of intent to defraud on the part of the debtor. All sorts of everyday reasons may be responsible—temporary financial reverses, lost or misplaced letters, misunderstanding, inaccuracy on the part of a salesman, forgetfulness, or merely a kind of laziness in business matters. This should be taken into consideration. Tact and consideration turn many doubtful accounts into reliable and valuable ones.

The statement should be sent when the account becomes due and payable, not on the 1st and 15th of the month. It should be enclosed in a friendly letter calling attention to the maturity of the bill and making it clear that a remittance is expected. Many customers must be educated to the fact that payments must be met promptly at maturity in order to maintain a good commercial rating. After allowing a week or ten days for a reply, a second collection letter should be sent courteously calling to the attention of the debtor his failure to pay. As many as four such letters may be sent. The latter may be given a more forceful tone, but all should be short and friendly, though not temporizing. They should convince the debtor of the writer's sincerity, get under his skin without being offensive. Threats are inadvisable at this point.

If several collection letters do not induce a reply, there is little hope of a friendly adjustment.

It is at this point that a sight draft is valuable. Formerly when a merchant refused to honor a sight draft, he found that such action lowered his credit standing. This is not always true today because many firms make it a positive rule never to pay sight drafts. The presentation of such a draft, particularly in a small town, where everybody knows all about the affairs of everybody else, is likely to bring some results. If possible it is always more satisfactory to draw the draft through the debtor's own bank.

After the sight draft has been drawn and refused it may be advisable to send the collection to a Justice of the Peace, or to the debtor's local bank, either of whose charges will not exceed 10%. On the other hand an attorney may be able to effect a prompt settlement, his charge depending on the amount of the claim. Collection agencies using a series of letters threatening suit or attachment proceedings, or public advertisement, are often effective, but it must be understood that such a system does away with the last hope of future business.

In order to begin suit to enforce a civil debt a complaint is filed stating the facts upon which the action is founded. The court then summons the debtor to appear and answer the charges, and the case is tried upon its merits. If judgment is rendered in favor of the creditor, the sheriff attaches, seizes, and sells enough of the debtor's property to satisfy the judgment. Either before or after the judgment is actually rendered, the creditor may cause to be issued a writ of garnishment or a writ of attachment. The former attaches money or property of the debtor in the possession of a third party while the latter authorizes the sheriff to seize the debtor's property in case he is about to leave the State, abscond, or is a non-resident. Bond is necessary in both cases to indemnify the debtor against loss caused by a wrongful suit.

Recourse to law is seldom advisable unless the account is a large one, and all other efforts have failed. Proper care in extending credit, and a good collection system are worth more to a business than a hundred judgments.

INFORMATION FOR SHIPPERS

The carelessness and ignorance of the shippers and receivers of freight are responsible for a great annual loss of time and money.

In shipping freight one should comply with the following instructions:

- a. See that each item is carefully checked in packing.
- b. Use the utmost care in nailing, sealing, or tying the shipping case.
- c. Mark the case plainly, showing name and address of both shipper and consignee.
- d. Make out a uniform bill of lading in clear, legible form, and deliver to the transportation company.

Great care must be taken in accepting freight to avoid misunderstanding.

a. Remove freight promptly to avoid congestion and storage charges.

b. Examine all freight before giving a receipt to the company.

c. In case of any visible damage or loss, the agent should write a description of it on the freight bill.

d. In case of invisible damage or loss, notify the carrier's agent to come immediately and verify your claim.

e. Notify the freight agent in writing if you intend to store the cases without checking until some later date.

f. If merchandise does not check with invoice, or if it is received in damaged condition, file a claim immediately with the transportation company and notify the shipper.

Filing a Freight Claim

The law allows six months after date of delivery in which to file a claim on damaged merchandise, and four months for non-delivery of shipments after a reasonable time has elapsed. The documents required are:

- a. The original paid freight bill.
- b. The original invoice or certified copy.
- c. The original bill of lading or memo.

On shipments damaged beyond repair or entirely lost, full invoice value plus freight should be claimed. An effort should be made to dispose of the damaged merchandise and allow credit for it on the claim. This in no way invalidates the claim. All correspondence should be answered promptly, quoting the file reference and furnishing all available information. The carrier's investigation may take from thirty to ninety days. In tracing claims, patience is essential. In making a claim against an express company, the procedure is practically the same. The invoice or copy thereof, and copy of original express receipt are the necessary documents. The Postal Department has a standard form to be filled in and signed when making claim for lost or damaged parcel post packages.

Rates and Classifications

It is very important for a shipper to consult the published rate. He cannot always depend on the statement of the carrier's agents. If the agent quotes an incorrect rate, the shipper is liable for the published rate. According to law the published rates are common documents, and carriers cannot charge any other rate. Ignorance of this law leads to many losses. A manufacturer may put in a bid on a certain order, and agree to pay all transportation charges. He may get the order, but in making shipment discover that he is compelled to pay a higher rate, which will wipe out his expected profit. On the other hand, he may figure the cost too high, and the order will go to his competitor, who makes it his business to consult the legal published rate.

Months or even years afterwards a shipper may learn to his sorrow that his merchandise has been moving under a wrong rate and be compelled to pay the difference.

According to law, a shipper must make it his business to know the correct freight classifications. He should do so for financial reasons as well. It is the duty of the traffic man to know the principal classifications, and the cheapest rate under each for his goods. He should describe the shipment in the exact language of the classification, avoiding the use of trade names. Frequently there are changes to lower freight costs by finding the best designation in each classification. Thus the rates differ for goods crated and uncrated, in packages or in bulk, set up or shipped flat, the saving running as high as 50 or 75% in many instances.

Losses to be Avoided

When goods are improperly routed or sent to a wrong destination owing to the shipper's error in making out the shipping ticket or bill of lading, the shipper must pay the excess freight. This is always true when the bill of lading is made out incorrectly and usually so when there is an error in shipping ticket, because of the fact that the carrier relies on the accuracy of the shipping ticket to expedite the shipment. Because of such mistakes, shipments are frequently billed to another town of the same name in another state or in an entirely different section of the country, and the difference in the cost of freight is a considerable item.

A railroad allows forty-eight hours after official notice of arrival of cars in which to unload. An unloaded car standing longer than this is subject to a demurrage charge, listed in the published rates. No charge is made for Sundays, holidays, or days on which it rains to any extent. The charge is a just one, and the receivers of freight should empty cars promptly for two reasons: first to avoid paying the demurrage charge; and second, to release cars, enabling the carrier to reduce his fixed charges, and thus ultimately reduce the cost of transportation.

The following certificate must appear on shipping orders and bills of lading when goods are shipped in fiber boxes:

The fiber boxes used for this shipment conform to the specifications set forth in the boxmaker's certificate thereon, and all other requirements of Rule 41 of the Consolidated Freight Classifications.

Failure to do this may cost the shipper or his customer 20% more in freight charges.

BOOKKEEPING

Bookkeeping is the art of recording business transactions in a regular and systematic manner; in a sense it is a branch of mathematics based on certain accepted rules and principles. A set of books properly kept tells a story of profits and losses, a story essential to the successful functioning of any business firm. Systems of bookkeeping differ greatly. In a small business the system may be very simple and readily learned. In a large business it is exceedingly complex. Years can be spent at high schools, business and commercial schools, colleges and universities in detailed study of the art of bookkeeping and the more general field of accounting. This does not mean that there is anything mysterious about the art, but only that it has many ramifications. Like other business methods, it is based on common sense.

There are two fundamental systems of bookkeeping: single entry and double entry. The distinction between them is based on the idea that every business transaction may be viewed from two aspects. From one aspect it is a gain; from the other, a loss. For example, when a sale is made, money is received and goods are lost. Similarly, when a purchase is made, goods are received and money is paid out. In single-entry bookkeeping, only one of these aspects is taken account of, and only one entry is made for each transaction; this system is analogous to that of a simple cash book, in which the only entries are those for money received and money paid out. In double-entry bookkeeping, on the other hand, two entries, identical in value, are made for each transaction, the one a debit, the other a credit. Debit entries are made when assets are increased, or when liabilities or proprietorship is decreased. Credit entries are made when assets are decreased, or when liability or proprietorship is increased. Further explanation of these terms will be found in the section "bookkeeping terms," following.

Single-entry bookkeeping involves less clerical work and is sometimes suitable for small businesses. But double-entry bookkeeping provides an invaluable check against errors, since the sum of the debits should always equal the sum of the credits; in other words, the books should balance.

There are three principal kinds of books used in double-entry bookkeeping: the books of first entry or journals; the ledger or ledgers; and the auxiliary books or subsidiary ledgers. Books of first entry include the day book or journal, cash book, sales book, and voucher register. Transactions are first recorded in these books and later transferred to the ledger. The latter operation is known as posting. The ledger is the most important and essential of all the books.

The auxiliary books, or subsidiary ledgers, are used to facilitate the grouping of related accounts, such as accounts receivable, in a separate book in order to relieve the general ledger of a mass of detail. The most important of the auxiliary books are the accounts-receivable ledger, the accounts-payable ledger, and the inventory record.

Intelligent, accurate bookkeeping is obviously essential to the success of a firm. It serves many purposes besides the main one of recording the status of a business and analyzing the reasons for its success or failure. It makes it possible for a firm to obtain credit, since when credit is desired a correct statement of financial condition must be furnished. It may be of great service as evidence in legal disputes. Finally, it enables a firm to meet competition intelligently by showing what merchandise costs, what selling and overhead expenses are, and what percentage must be added to make sales profitable.

Bookkeeping Terms

The following terms, arranged alphabetically, consist chiefly of types of accounts and types of entries. Particular attention is given to the question of where and how various entries are made.

Accounts Payable.—These are accounts owed others. Credit the general ledger account under that title with the total of all such accounts, and debit or charge it with all that has been paid on them during the month. The balance must agree with the sum of the individual balances of the accounts owed.

Accounts Receivable.—These are accounts of persons or individuals in debt to the firm in question. Debit the general ledger account under that heading with the total of all charges against these accounts during the month, and credit it with all payments and allowances made on said accounts. The balance must agree with the sum of the balance of the individual accounts and represents an asset.

Accrued Expenses.—Accrued expenses, such as interest payable, salaries or wages payable, etc., should be charged to these respective accounts at the end of the accounting period, in order to show correctly the amount of unpaid earnings at this time, and credited when paid.

Accrued Interest Receivable.—Where interest has accrued but is not yet payable on notes and other commercial paper, due from others, charge this account with the amount, and credit the interest account. When the interest is received it is credited to "accrued interest receivable."

Allowances.—Discount taken contrary to terms, but allowed, returned merchandise, etc., are debited to the terms account, and credited to the account of the firm in question.

Assets or Resources.—A resource or asset is anything of value owned by the firm from which cash can be realized. Examples of assets are cash, merchandise, buildings, real estate, store fixtures and furniture, notes receivable, accounts receivable, etc.

Balance Sheet.—This is a statement showing the financial condition of a business at a particular time. The assets or resources are arranged in one group; and the liabilities in another. The difference between the totals of the two groups gives the net worth of the business. The title of the statement should be clearly stated and include the name of the business enterprise and the date on which the statement was made.

Cash.—This is a title used to designate money. Under it is included currency, bank drafts, checks, express and postal money orders. Cash is debited when received and credited when paid out. The difference shows the cash on hand which is an asset.

Cash Book.—This book is used for recording all cash transactions. One section is usually set aside to record cash received, and the other to record cash paid out. If the business is large, separate books are kept for receipts and disbursements. The footings in these books are posted to the general ledger accounts at the end of the accounting period.

Day Book and Journal.—Formerly these two books were kept separately and entries made in the day book were arranged by debits and credits in the journal before posting to the ledger. Now the two books are consolidated into one, preferably called a "journal," and the entries arranged for posting by debits and credits, followed by a short explanation of the transaction. The ordinary two-column journal may be used, with the left hand column for the debit and the right hand column for the credit, but in order to save time and work in posting, special journals of four, six, eight and more columns are often prepared.

Deferred Charges.—Insurance and other similar expense items paid ahead or beyond the date of closing the books are entitled to a credit for that portion of the premium on the unexpired time. This credit is entered on the credit side of insurance accounts and the difference charged to profit and loss. After closing the books this account will be brought forward to the debit side as an asset and appears as such in the financial statement. Office supplies, packing material on hand, etc., also come under this head.

Depreciation.—Property such as buildings, machinery, tools, store and office fixtures, depreciates from year to year by reason of wear and tear and obsolescence. In the course of time it becomes entirely worthless and must be replaced. Provision is made for such replacement by setting up a reserve-for-depreciation account. The percentage or amount to be charged off each year depends upon the estimated life or length of usefulness of the asset. Accounts and bills receivable are also subject to shrinkage in value when some of them are found worthless and uncollectable, and a reserve must be provided for bad debts. The amount of reserve is based on the past experience of the company.

Equipment.—Store, office, and delivery equipment represent an investment. Charge store equipment with such items as counters, shelving, scales, measures, etc.; office equipment with such office furniture as desks, safes, letter files, etc.; delivery equipment with trucks, wagons, horses, harness, etc. Repairs for these should not be charged to any of these accounts; they are an expense. A reasonable amount should always be charged off annually for the depreciation of equipment.

Expenses.—Under this title are generally included such items as rent, salaries, office supplies, fuel, light, postage, etc. If it is desired to show these items in detail, separate accounts may be opened for each one in the ledger. Expense accounts are finally included in the profit and loss account.

Ledger.—The ledger is the book of final entry, collecting and classifying from the books of original entry, all debits and credits having the same name under the one heading, called an account, by a process termed posting. In large business several ledgers or divisions of ledgers are used, viz.: general ledger, purchase ledger, and sales ledger, the latter two carrying controlling accounts on the general ledger. In a small business only one ledger is used. It may, however, be divided into three sections: (1) general accounts, (2) accounts receivable, (3) accounts payable. With the present loose-leaf ledger method this division can be easily made, and by arranging the accounts under each division in alphabetical order, the necessity for a separate index is avoided.

Liabilities.—A liability is an obligation owed by the firm in question, such as notes payable or any personal account.

Losses and Gains.—An account shows a loss if the thing it represents has cost more than it has produced; a gain if it has produced more than it cost.

Merchandise.—This is the general term for all goods and wares dealt in or carried in stock by an active business concern. A merchandise account may be opened and debited with all goods bought and credited with all the proceeds from goods sold. The value of goods on hand unsold added to the proceeds from sales, less the cost, shows the profit on the goods sold. However, if the cost exceeds the other two items, the goods were sold at a loss. The inventory of goods on hand is always an asset. Sometimes, for the purpose of showing profits and losses in greater detail, separate accounts are opened with such commodities as "flour," "potatoes," "apples," "corn," etc., instead of including all under "merchandise."

Monthly Summary of Business.—A monthly summary of purchases, sales, expenses, and ratios is often useful. It may be arranged with columns for these various headings with the figures taken from the ledger. Each month the figures for that month should be recorded so that the record will give the total for each month from the first of the year to date. The sum of these monthly totals will be the record of totals for the year.

Notes Payable.—These are notes, or written obligations, which others hold, for which the firm must pay a certain amount when due. Credit this account with all notes given to trade creditors, or trade acceptances and time drafts accepted in their favor, and charge the account as they are paid. The balance of the account shows obligations outstanding.

Notes Receivable.—These are other persons' notes or written obligations, for which, when due, the payment of a specific sum is expected. Charge this account with all notes, time drafts, and trade acceptances held against others, and credit it when paid or otherwise disposed of. The balance will show the sum of the unpaid items, which is an asset.

Personal Accounts.—Persons are debited when they get into debt to the firm, and when the firm gets out of their debt. Persons are credited when the firm gets into their debt, and when they get out of debt to the firm.

Profit and Loss Statement.—This financial statement is second in importance only to the balance sheet. Its main difference is that it reflects the results of operations between two particular dates as distinguished from the financial condition at a particular time. The accounts used in making up this statement are the sales, purchases, and expense accounts. In other words, all accounts which cannot be classified as assets, liabilities, or net worth are used in the profit and loss statement.

Property.—Property is debited under such titles as merchandise, real estate, cash, etc., when it comes into the firm's possession. It is credited when it goes out of the firm's possession.

Proprietorship.—This account, occasionally called the proprietor's capital account, represents the proprietor's net capital. The account is debited for his liabilities assumed by the business, for all amounts drawn by him from the business, for his private use, and for his net loss if any. It is credited for the amount of his investment on commencing business, for all later investments, and for his net gain, if any. The balance of the account is his net capital at the time of closing.

Purchases Account.—Modern practice is introducing the purchases account in place of the debit to merchandise. All merchandise purchased is debited or charged to purchase account. If accounts for freight, drayage, expressage, etc., on merchandise are kept separately, their totals should finally be charged into this account also. Credit the account with any merchandise returned to the seller or any discounts or allowances for defects, etc. The balance of the account is transferred to the debit of a "trading account."

Reserves.—Part of the profits of a concern may be retained in the business to provide funds for certain future needs as for the payment of fixed debts or business extensions, depreciation, bad debts, income taxes, etc. The sum set aside for such purposes is taken out of and charged to the surplus account, and credited to the reserve set up for that special purpose.

Resources and Liabilities.—An account shows a resource, if it represents property on hand or a debt owed to the firm; a liability, if it represents a debt owed by the firm. The excess in an account showing either a resource or a loss will always be on the debit side and the excess showing either a liability or a gain on the credit side.

Sales Account.—Credit it with the total sales of all merchandise as shown by the sales book, sales tickets, or whatever method is used for recording sales. Merchandise returned by customers, whether for cash or credit, should be charged or debited at selling price to this account. The difference in the account, the net sales, is transferred to the "trading account."

Sales Book.—This is a book in which all the merchandise sales are recorded. The personal accounts charged therein should be posted daily and the total sales may be carried forward until the end of the month and then posted in one entry to the credit of a sales account in the ledger. Where sales and credit tickets are used instead of a sales book, they may be sorted at the close of the day, charging the total cash receipts to cash, crediting sales to the accounts of their respective customers, and crediting the total sales to the sales account. When goods are returned, sales accounts must be charged with them and the customer's account credited.

Trading Account.—This account shows the inventory of merchandise at the opening of business, is charged with purchases and sales allowances, and credited with sales. The inventory at closing is then credited and the balance shows the gross profit on trading. This gross profit is then transferred as a credit to the profit and loss account, and the inventory brought down for a new balance.

Trial Balance.—The trial balance is taken to ascertain the equality of the debits and credits as posted in the ledger. It is nothing more nor less than a copy of the accounts or their balances, and if the footings of the debits and credits do not agree there is an error in posting. The trial balance is not an absolute proof of correctness, but if the footings are equal the work is generally regarded as correct.

Locating Errors in Double-Entry Bookkeeping

When trial balance totals do not agree it is certain that one or more errors have been made somewhere, but there is no single rule or combination of rules with which such errors can at once be located outside of a careful review of the entire work. However, the following hints and suggestions may be of service and help in locating them.

A large difference between the debit and credit totals of a trial balance usually indicates an omission of some item or account. See if all the accounts or balances of accounts have been included in the trial balance. If an amount has been omitted in posting, the trial balance also will be out of balance by that much. Look for such an unchecked amount in the books from which postings were made.

An amount posted to the wrong side of the ledger will throw the trial balance just twice that amount out of balance. If the difference is divisible by 2, look for half of that amount on the side with the smaller totals in the books from which postings were made and see if such an amount was posted to the other side of the ledger account. The cash and accounts-receivable balance can never be on the credit side, nor the accounts-payable balance on the debit side of the account.

If the difference between the debit and credit totals be 1, or in round numbers, as 10, 100, 1,000, the error very likely results from wrong addition or subtraction. Check the additions of the trial balance and if the error is not found there, check those of the ledger also. Where ledger balances only are entered in the trial balance, an error may have been made in finding the difference between the two sides of an account. If an error is in the cents column only, the columns to the left need not be re-added.

If the difference is divisible by 9 the error may rest in a transposition of figures, as for instance 57 posted as 75 causing a difference of 18, or 735 posted as 537 causing a difference of 198, both of which are divisible by 9. Errors of transposition are difficult to find; however, if the difference consists of less than three figures such as 9, 18, 27, etc., a one-column transposition may have caused the error. Divide this difference by 9; if the quotient is 1, the difference between the two transposed figures is also 1; if 2 or 3 the difference between the transposed figures is likewise 2 or 3. When the difference lies between 99 and 1,000, the error may be due to a two-column transposition. Here the middle figure of the error is always a 9, as for instance 981 written as 189 results in an error of 792. Dividing the two outside figures of the difference (72) by 9, the quotient 8 is also the difference between the two transposed figures (9 and 1).

Another common type of error results from a transplacement or "slide." Figures are transplaced when some or all of the digits of a number are moved one or more places to the right or left without any change in their order; for instance 327 written as 32.70 or 3.27. The first is a one-column, the second a two-column slide. The error caused by a one-column slide is always divisible by nine, a two-column by 99, a three-column by 999, etc. Such division, disregarding decimals, always gives the figures whose transplacement has caused the error. The error caused by writing 327 as 32.70 is 294.30 which divided by 9 produces 327; or 327 written as 3.27 causes a difference of 323.73 which divided by 99 produces 327.

Legal Points in Bookkeeping

Occasions may sometimes arise in which the books of a firm become of importance in courts of law. Only records of original entry are accepted as evidence in court, especially the day book and journal, as evidence of sale and delivery of goods or work done. For this reason, as well as for many others, the time to make an entry or charge against the purchaser of goods or for work done is when the goods are ready for delivery, or the work has been completed. Entries to be admissible as evidence, should be made by the proper person, and without erasure, alterations, or interlineations. Mistakes should be corrected by marking the wrong entry void, and then making a correct entry. All accounts must be itemized and no general charge can be considered as evidence, unless it lists the separate items.

If A guarantees that he will see that B will pay a certain bill of goods, then the goods must be charged to A and not to B in order to hold A responsible; but if A guarantees the account of B, if the account is for some date of the past, the guarantee must be in writing.

To collect a debt on the evidence of book accounts from a person in a distant place, a copy of the account should be made out and accompanied by an affidavit, setting forth that the account is correctly taken from the book or records of original entries; that the charges were made at or about the same time of their respective dates; that the goods were sold and delivered at or about the time the charges were made; that the charges are correct and the accounts just; and that the person named is not entitled to any credit not mentioned in the account. The affidavit should be sworn to before a magistrate, commissioner or notary public. This obviates the trouble of producing or sending the books.

BUSINESS ARITHMETIC

This section is hardly intended to be an exhaustive study of business arithmetic; nor does it attempt to touch upon the theoretical abstractions of arithmetic. The inclusion of material has been guided by the practical needs of everyday business problems: problems involving fractions, decimals, percentage, interest, discounts and measurements. The principles of these arithmetical processes will be given, as well as such other aids as will be helpful.

The four fundamental operations of arithmetic—addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division—are familiar to everyone. The underlying principle of these operations is that only similar quantities can be added, subtracted, multiplied or divided. Thus, one can add 5 hats and 3 hats, for instance, and get 8 hats; but one cannot add 5 hats and 3 oranges, because they are dissimilar quantities.

ADDITION

Addition is the process of uniting two or more numbers in one total called a sum. The sign used to indicate this process is called plus (+): $6 + 3 = 9$. To add rapidly it is best to group mentally the numbers in a column of figures, so that they total 8, 9, 10, 12, or some other convenient sum.

6	2	82
3	5	31
8	3	25
2	6	49
9	4	36
1	1	12
6	3	60
9	8	89
44	32	384

Accuracy is more important than speed in arithmetic. Of the various methods by which the correctness of an addition may be checked, these two are the simplest: (1) If the column of figures has been added from top to bottom, then re-add starting at the bottom and going upward; if the results obtained by both methods are the same, the answer is probably correct. (2) Re-add the column of figures, omitting the top row of figures from the addition, and subtract this sum from the first result obtained; if the difference between these two sums is equal to the top row of figures omitted from the second addition, then the answer is probably correct. By applying this method to the above column, for instance, omitting the 82, one obtains the sum of 302, which when subtracted from 384 leaves 82.

SUBTRACTION

Subtraction is the operation of finding the difference between two numbers. The larger number or the one from which the subtraction is being made, is called the minuend, the smaller number is called the subtrahend, and the result is called the remainder. The sign used to indicate this process is called minus (-). In subtraction, the smaller number is always taken from the larger one; the reverse is impossible except algebraically. Thus 6 can be subtracted from 10; but 10 cannot be subtracted from 6. To check the correctness of a result in subtraction, add the remainder to the subtrahend, and if the sum is equal to the minuend the answer is correct. Thus:

		Check
Selling Price	$831.50	$207.35
Cost	624.15	624.15
Profit	$207.35	$831.50

MULTIPLICATION

Multiplication is the process by which any given number or quantity may be augmented any number of times by a short method of addition. The number to be multiplied is called the multiplicand, the number by which it is multiplied is called the multiplier, and the result is called the product. The sign used to indicate multiplication is called times (×).

Of the many short cuts in this process, the multiplication table, which should be learned by heart, is one of the most helpful. Another short method is multiplying by 10, 100, 1000, etc. simply by adding the ciphers to the multiplicand. Thus, in 100×15 , add the two zeros to the 15, and the product is 1500; in 1000×24 , add the three zeros to the 24 and the product is 24,000, etc. If the number to the left of the ciphers in the multiplier is something other than 1 (as 40, 1600, 23,000) then multiply by that number and add the ciphers to the product.

12	1600
46	492
23	82
276000	131200

If the multiplier is 9, 99, 999, etc., multiply by 10, or 100, or 1000 and subtract the multiplicand from the product. Thus, in 48×99 take 48 times 100, or 4800, and subtract 48:

$$48 \times 100 = 4800 - 48 = 4752.$$

If the multiplier is 11, 101, 1001, etc., multiply by 10, 100, or 1000 and add the multiplicand to the product. Thus, in 16×101 take 16 times 100, or 1600, add 16:

$$16 \times 100 = 1600 + 16 = 1616.$$

To check the results of multiplication, divide the product by the multiplier, and if the quotient is equal to the multiplicand, then the answer is probably correct. The following will serve as an illustration of a multiplication and check:

82	82
16	16/1312
492	128
82	32
1312	32

DIVISION

Division is the process of determining the number of times one number is contained in another. The number to be divided is called the dividend, the number by which it is divided is the divisor, and the result is the quotient. If the solution does not come out to an even number the fractional part left over is called the remainder. The sign used to indicate division is ÷.

In general, there are two methods of division: (1) short division, where the steps in the process are done mentally (usually with a divisor of 10 or less); (2) long division, where all steps in the process are written out. Thus $6432 \div 8 = 804$ is an illustration of short division. Long division is illustrated by the following:

$$\begin{array}{r} 85 \overline{) 69342} \\ 680 \\ \hline 134 \\ 85 \\ \hline 492 \\ 425 \\ \hline 67 \end{array}$$

To check, multiply the quotient by the divisor (adding the remainder, if any, to the product), and if the product equals the dividend, the result is correct.

For numbers which are a power of 10, (100, 1000, 10,000) this short method is helpful: beginning at the right, cross out as many figures in the dividend as there are zeros in the divisor; the figures in the dividend, other than crossed out zeros, constitute the remainder.

$$160 \div 10 = 16$$

$$62851 \div 1000 = 62 \frac{851}{1000}$$

For numbers which are a multiple of 10 (30, 50, 200, etc.) proceed as above, dividing what is left by the remaining figure in the divisor.

$$150 \div 30 = \frac{15}{3} = 5$$

$$86013 \div 200 = \frac{860}{2} + \frac{13}{200} = 430 \frac{13}{200}$$

Fractions

Fractions are parts of a whole expressed numerically. The number in a fraction written below the line is the denominator; the one written above the line is the numerator; both together are called the terms of a fraction. If the numerator of a fraction is less than the denominator, as $\frac{4}{5}$, $\frac{3}{10}$, $\frac{7}{8}$, it is a proper fraction. If the numerator is equal to, or exceeds, the denominator, as $\frac{4}{4}$, $\frac{6}{4}$, $\frac{7}{2}$, it is an improper fraction. If the fraction expresses a whole number and a fractional part, as $1\frac{3}{4}$, $2\frac{5}{7}$, $3\frac{3}{5}$, it is a mixed number.

Fractions are capable of being added, subtracted, multiplied and divided. It is frequently expedient, and a time saver, to reduce fractions to their lowest terms or to find their least common denominator before starting any one of these processes. For this a knowledge of factoring and cancellation is necessary. Factoring is the process of finding the smallest numbers (prime numbers) which are the divisors of a larger number. Thus 2 and 3 are the prime factors of 6 because they are the smallest numbers which, when multiplied together, equal 6; 2 and 2 and 2 are the prime factors of 8; 4 and 3 the prime factors of 12, etc. The following rules will be found helpful in factoring:

Two will divide evenly any even number.

Three will divide evenly any number the sum of whose digits is divisible by 3. Thus 3 will divide evenly 813 because 12, the sum of $8 + 1 + 3$, is evenly divisible by 3.

Four will divide evenly any number whose last two digits on the right form a figure divisible by 4. Thus, 4 will evenly divide 69,816 because 16, the last two digits, is evenly divisible by 4.

Five will divide evenly any number ending in 0 or 5.

Six will divide evenly any even number the sum of whose digits is divisible by 3. Thus 6 will divide evenly 2616 because 15, the sum of $2 + 6 + 1 + 6$, is divisible by 3.

Eight will divide evenly any number whose last three digits on the right make a figure divisible by 8. Thus, 8 will divide evenly 23,624 because 624, the last three digits, is evenly divisible by 8.

Nine will divide evenly any number the sum of whose digits is divisible by 9. Thus 9 will divide evenly 32,193 because 18, the sum of $3 + 2 + 1 + 9 + 3$, is evenly divisible by 9.

Ten will divide evenly any number ending in 0.

Cancellation is the process of eliminating a common factor in both the numerator and denominator of a fraction. It is most useful in multiplying and dividing fractions, and in reducing a fraction to its lowest terms. For

$$\text{instance, the result } \frac{26}{52} \times \frac{3}{18} = \frac{2}{12} = \frac{1}{6} = 78 \text{ is obtained}$$ by determining that 6, a common factor of 12 and 18, divides into those numbers 2 and 3 times respectively. Two, a factor of 52, divides into this number 26 times. Multiplying 26 by 3, 78 is obtained.

An improper fraction can be changed to a whole number or mixed number by dividing the numerator by the denominator. Thus, the improper fraction $\frac{6}{2}$ is converted to the whole number 3 simply by dividing 6 by 2; likewise, $\frac{7}{2}$ is converted to the mixed number $3\frac{1}{2}$ by dividing 7 by 2. To change $3\frac{1}{2}$ (a mixed number) back to $\frac{7}{2}$ (an improper fraction) multiply 3 (the whole number) by 2 (the denominator of the fraction $\frac{1}{2}$) and add 1 (the numerator of the fraction $\frac{1}{2}$) to the product, retaining 2 as the denominator of the newly created fraction. Thus,

$$\frac{3 \times 2 + 1}{2} = \frac{7}{2}$$

ADDITION OF FRACTIONS AND MIXED NUMBERS

If the fractions to be added have the same denominator, add the numerators, write this sum over the denominator, and reduce to lowest terms, if necessary. Thus, $\frac{1}{5} + \frac{2}{5} = \frac{3}{5}$;

similarly, $\frac{1}{6} + \frac{5}{6} = \frac{6}{6} = 1$.

If the fractions to be added do not have the same denominator, find the least common denominator, divide it by the denominator of each fraction, multiply the results by the respective numerators and write the new figures over the common denominator; add the numerators, and reduce to lowest terms. The least common denominator, 8, is divided by 2, and the result, 4, multiplied by 1. Similarly, it is divided by 4, and the result, 2, multiplied by 3, producing 6. Adding these newly obtained numerators, one arrives at $\frac{17}{8}$, which reduces to $2\frac{1}{8}$.

$$\begin{array}{r|l} \frac{1}{2} & \frac{4}{8} \\ \frac{3}{4} & \frac{6}{8} \\ \hline \frac{7}{8} & \frac{7}{8} \\ \hline & \frac{17}{8} = 2\frac{1}{8} \end{array}$$

If mixed numbers are to be added, add the fractions first, then the whole numbers, and finally combine the two sums.

$$\begin{array}{r|l} 1\frac{5}{8} & \frac{15}{24} \\ 2\frac{3}{4} & \frac{18}{24} \\ 6\frac{2}{3} & \frac{16}{24} \\ \hline 9 & \frac{49}{24} = 2\frac{1}{24} \\ 2\frac{1}{24} & \\ \hline 11\frac{1}{24} & \end{array}$$

The fractional part is done as in the example, so that $\frac{49}{24}$, which reduces to $2\frac{1}{24}$, is obtained. Adding the whole numbers, 9 is obtained, to which is added $2\frac{1}{24}$, producing the final result of $11\frac{1}{24}$.

SUBTRACTION OF FRACTIONS AND MIXED NUMBERS

If the fractions to be subtracted have the same denominator, subtract the numerators, write this remainder over the denominator, and reduce to lowest terms, if necessary.

Thus, $\frac{2}{6} - \frac{1}{6} = \frac{1}{6}$; similarly, $\frac{5}{6} - \frac{1}{6} = \frac{4}{6} = \frac{2}{3}$.

If the fractions to be subtracted do not have the same denominator, the steps followed are the same as in addition except that the new numerators are subtracted instead of added.

$$\begin{array}{r|l} \frac{3}{6} & \frac{6}{12} \\ \frac{1}{4} & \frac{3}{12} \\ \hline & \frac{2}{12} = \frac{1}{6} \end{array}$$

If mixed numbers are to be subtracted, first subtract the fractions, borrowing 1 from the whole number if necessary, then subtract the whole numbers, and finally combine the two.

The least common denominator, 8, when divided by 4 and multiplied by 3 produces 6. Subtracting, $\frac{1}{8}$ is obtained. Subtracting the whole numbers, 3 is obtained, which is combined with $\frac{1}{8}$, giving the final result of $3\frac{1}{8}$.

$$\begin{array}{r|l} 4\frac{3}{4} & \frac{6}{8} \\ 1\frac{5}{8} & \frac{5}{8} \\ \hline & \frac{1}{8} \end{array}$$

The solution is the same as in the preceding problem, except that 9 could not be subtracted from 8, a smaller number.

Hence, 1, or $\frac{12}{12}$, was borrowed from the whole number 4, and added to $\frac{6}{12}$, giving $\frac{20}{12}$, from which $\frac{9}{12}$ is subtracted. Then 1 from 3 is subtracted, giving 2, which is combined with $\frac{11}{12}$.

$$\begin{array}{r|l} 3\frac{2}{3} & \frac{8}{12} + \frac{12}{12} = \frac{20}{12} \\ 4\frac{2}{3} & \frac{9}{12} \\ \hline 1\frac{1}{4} & \frac{11}{12} \\ 2\frac{11}{12} & \frac{11}{12} \end{array}$$

MULTIPLICATION OF FRACTIONS AND WHOLE NUMBERS

If fractions are to be multiplied, cancel where possible, then write the product of the numerators over the product of the denominators, and reduce to lowest terms if necessary.

$$\text{Thus, } \frac{2}{3} \times \frac{1}{6} = \frac{1}{9}; \text{ similarly, } \frac{1}{3} \times \frac{2}{5} = \frac{2}{15}.$$

If mixed numbers are to be multiplied, change the mixed numbers to improper fractions, cancel where possible, then write the product of the numerators over the product of the denominators, and reduce to lowest terms if necessary.

$$\text{Thus, } 8\frac{3}{5} \times 6\frac{1}{4} = \frac{43}{5} \times \frac{25}{4} = \frac{215}{4} = 53\frac{3}{4};$$

$$\text{similarly, } 4\frac{9}{10} \times 5\frac{3}{7} = \frac{49}{10} \times \frac{38}{7} = \frac{133}{5} = 26\frac{3}{5}.$$

If a whole number and a fraction are to be multiplied, cancel where possible, multiply the whole number by the numerator, and divide by the denominator.

$$\text{Thus, } 343 \times \frac{3}{7} = 147;$$

$$\text{similarly, } 125 \times \frac{3}{4} = \frac{375}{2} = 187\frac{1}{2}.$$

DIVISION OF FRACTIONS AND MIXED NUMBERS

If fractions are to be divided, invert the divisor, cancel where possible, and proceed as in multiplication.

$$\text{Thus, } \frac{5}{6} \div \frac{3}{4} = \frac{5}{6} \times \frac{4}{3} = \frac{10}{9} = 1\frac{1}{9};$$

$$\text{similarly, } \frac{2}{3} \div \frac{1}{3} = \frac{2}{3} \times \frac{3}{1} = 2.$$

If mixed numbers are to be divided, change these to improper fractions, invert the divisor, cancel where possible, and proceed as in multiplication.

$$\text{Thus, } 3\frac{5}{7} \div 8\frac{2}{5} = \frac{26}{7} \div \frac{42}{5} = \frac{26}{7} \times \frac{5}{42} = \frac{65}{147};$$

similarly,

$$6\frac{1}{2} \div 5\frac{1}{5} = \frac{13}{2} \div \frac{26}{5} = \frac{13}{2} \times \frac{5}{26} = \frac{5}{4} = 1\frac{1}{4}.$$

If a whole number and a fraction are to be divided, invert the divisor, cancel where possible, and proceed, as in multiplication.

$$\text{Thus, } 69816 \div \frac{4}{5} = 69816 \times \frac{5}{4} = 87270;$$

similarly,

$$840 \div 5\frac{3}{5} = 840 \div \frac{28}{5} = 840 \times \frac{5}{28} = 150.$$

Decimals

A fraction can be written in one of two ways: As a common fraction, or as a decimal (also called decimal fraction). Thus, the common fraction $\frac{7}{10}$ can also be expressed decimally as .7 (to avoid confusion a zero is sometimes placed to the left of the decimal point, as 0.7); the common fraction $\frac{7}{100}$ can also be expressed decimally as .07; $\frac{7}{1000}$ as

.007; $\frac{7}{10,000}$ as .0007, etc. From this it can be seen that in a common fraction the denominator is always written, whereas in a decimal the denominator is represented by a period or decimal point, which is placed to the left of the numerator ($\frac{7}{10} = .7$). The size of the denominator in a decimal fraction is always determined by the number of figures to the right of the decimal point. Thus, one decimal place represents tenths; two decimal places represent hundredths; three decimal places represent thousandths; four decimal places represent ten-thousandths, five decimal places represent hundred-thousandths, etc.

To change a fraction to a decimal, divide the numerator by the denominator, placing a decimal to the right of the numerator and adding as many zeros as necessary to bring out the division evenly or approximately.

Thus, $\frac{1}{4}$, for instance, is converted to a decimal in the following manner:

$$\frac{1}{4} = 4 \overline{)1.00}; \text{ similarly, } \frac{2}{3} = 3 \overline{)2.00}.$$

To change a decimal to a fraction, drop the decimal point, write in a denominator with as many zeros as there are figures to the right of the decimal, and reduce to lowest terms. Thus .875, for instance, is converted to a fraction as follows:

$$.875 = \frac{\overset{7}{\cancel{875}}}{\underset{8}{\cancel{1000}}} = \frac{7}{8};$$

$$\text{similarly, } .66\frac{2}{3} = \frac{66\frac{2}{3}}{100} = \frac{200}{300} = \frac{2}{3}.$$

The $\frac{200}{300}$ is obtained by multiplying the numerator and denominator by 3.)

ADDITION OF DECIMALS

To add a column of decimals, arrange the figures so that the decimal points are placed one directly under the other, and proceed as in ordinary addition.

$69.20	84.691
17.84	7.02
5.31	35.1
23.65	0.0921
14.78	3.1416
$130.78	130.0447

SUBTRACTION OF DECIMALS

To subtract decimals, arrange the figures so that the decimal points are placed one directly under another, and proceed as in ordinary subtraction.

$16.95	16.83
3.22	12.0914
$13.73	4.7386

(In subtracting 12.0914 from 16.83, zeros were added mentally so that it became 16.8300. This can be done because the addition of zeros to the last number of a decimal does not alter its value.)

MULTIPLICATION OF DECIMALS

To multiply decimals, proceed as in ordinary multiplication, count the number of decimal places in the multiplier and multiplicand, and point off as many in the product, starting at the right and moving toward the left.

37.848

DIVISION OF DECIMALS

To divide a decimal by a whole number, place the decimal point on the quotient line, directly above the decimal point in the dividend, and proceed as in ordinary division. If the answer is not even, carry out to at least two decimal places.

	46

To divide a decimal by a decimal, move the decimal point in the divisor to the extreme right, move it as many places to the right in the dividend as it was moved in the divisor, and proceed as in ordinary division. For example, to divide 8.5116 by 2.46, the decimal point must first be moved two places to the right in the divisor, changing that number from 2.46 to the whole number 246; then it must be moved an equal number of places in the dividend, changing that number from 8.5116 to 851.16.

To divide a whole number by a decimal, move the decimal point in the divisor to the extreme right, add as many zeros to the dividend as the decimal point was moved places in the divisor, putting a decimal point after the last of these zeros, and proceed as in ordinary division, carrying out to two decimal places if the answer is not even. For example, to divide 6248 by 1.25 the decimal point must first be moved two places to the right in the divisor, changing that number from 1.25 to the whole number 125. The decimal point having been moved two places in the divisor, two zeros must now be added to the dividend, changing that number from 6248 to 624800

Since the result 4998 still left a fractional part, the latter was eliminated by carrying out to one more decimal place, giving the even answer 4998.4.

Percentage

Percentage is the expression of numbers in terms of hundredths. The sign used to indicate this process is called per cent (%). The number upon which the per cent is calculated is the base; the amount of the per cent is the rate; and the result of the calculation made with the base and the rate is called the percentage. For example, in 2% of $125 = $2.50, 2% is the rate, $125 is the base, and $2.50 the percentage.

If the base and the rate are known, divide the rate by 100 and then multiply the one by the other to find the percentage. Thus to find 8% of $240 multiply one hundredth part of the rate (.08) by the base ($240).

$$\begin{array}{r} $240 \text{ (base)} \\ .08 \text{ (rate)} \\ \hline $19.20 \text{ (percentage).} \end{array}$$

To find the rate when the base and percentage are known, divide the percentage by the base. Thus, if $100 yielded a return of $4.00, what was the rate of return?

$$\frac{\text{(percentage)}}{\text{(base)}} = \frac{$4.00}{$100} = .04 \text{ or } 4\% \text{ (rate).}$$

To find the base when the percentage and rate are known, divide the percentage by one hundredth part of the rate. Thus, if 4% yielded a return of $4.00, how much money was invested?

$$\frac{\text{(percentage)}}{\text{(rate)}} = \frac{$4.00}{.04} = $100 \text{ (base).}$$

Where b = base, r = rate, and % = percentage, these three principles may be expressed with the following formulas:

$$(1) \quad b \times \frac{r}{100} = \%$$

$$(2) \quad \frac{\%}{b} = \frac{r}{100}$$

$$(3) \quad \frac{\%}{r} = b$$

The following table of percentages and their fractional equivalents, because of their frequent use, should be memorized.

12½% = $\frac{1}{8}$	16⅔% = $\frac{1}{6}$
25% = $\frac{1}{4}$	33⅓% = $\frac{1}{3}$
37½% = $\frac{3}{8}$	66⅔% = $\frac{2}{3}$
50% = $\frac{1}{2}$	83⅓% = $\frac{5}{6}$
62½% = $\frac{5}{8}$	20% = $\frac{1}{5}$
75% = $\frac{3}{4}$	40% = $\frac{2}{5}$
87½% = $\frac{7}{8}$	60% = $\frac{3}{5}$
8⅓% = $\frac{1}{12}$	80% = $\frac{4}{5}$

Interest

Interest is the amount of money earned by, or paid for, the use of a sum of money called the principal. The rate is the per cent of interest charged or paid for the use of the money. In the calculation of simple interest a year consists of 360 days, or of 12 months of 30 days each. Unless otherwise specified interest is always calculated on the basis of one year. Where I stands for interest, P for principal, R for rate, and T for time, the method of finding the interest on any principal can be expressed by the following formula:

$$I = P \times \frac{R}{100} \times T$$

This formula will always work, whether the time be expressed in terms of years, months, or days. The following examples will serve as illustration of usual and alternate methods of solution.

(1) Find the interest on $835 at 6% for 3 years.

$$\begin{array}{r} (1) \quad $835 \text{ (P)} \\ .06 \text{ (R)} \\ \hline $50.10 \text{ (int. for 1 yr.)} \\ 3 \text{ (T)} \\ \hline $150.30 \text{ (int. for 3 yrs.)} \end{array} \quad \begin{array}{r} (2) \quad $835 \\ .18 \\ \hline 6680 \\ 835 \\ \hline $150.30 \end{array}$$

In this solution, since 6% for 3 yrs. amounts to 18%, the principal is multiplied by .18.

(2) Find the interest on $276 at 6% for 5 months.

$$\begin{array}{r} (1) \quad $276 \text{ (P)} \\ .06 \text{ (R)} \\ \hline $16.56 \text{ (int. for 1 yr.)} \end{array} \quad \begin{array}{r} (2) \quad \frac{276 \times .06 \times 5}{12} = $6.90 \\ (3) \quad \frac{276 \times 6 \times 5}{12} = $6.90 \end{array}$$

$$(T) \quad \frac{5}{12} \times \frac{1.38}{100} = $6.90 \text{ (int. for 5 mos.)}$$

In solution 3, by dividing $276 by 100, yielding $2.76, the .06 immediately changes to the whole number 6.

(3) Find the interest on $496 at 8% for 45 days.

$$\begin{array}{r} (1) \quad $496 \text{ (P)} \\ .08 \text{ (R)} \\ \hline $39.68 \text{ (int. for 1 yr.)} \end{array} \quad \begin{array}{r} (2) \quad \frac{496 \times .08 \times 45}{360} = $4.96 \\ (3) \quad \frac{496 \times 8 \times 45}{360} = $4.96 \end{array}$$

$$(T) \quad \frac{45}{360} \times \frac{4.96}{100} = $4.96 \text{ (int. for 45 days).}$$

SHORTER METHODS FOR COMPUTING SIMPLE INTEREST

To find the interest at 6% for 60 days, point off two places from the right on the principal. For example, the interest on $635 at 6% for 60 days is $6.35. By bearing this principle in mind, the interest at 6% for any number of days can be quickly found.

(1) Find the interest on $345 at 6% for 45 days.

$345 = $3.45 (int. for 60 days)

$$\frac{3}{\frac{45}{60}} \times $3.45 = \frac{10.35}{4} = $2.5875$$

or $2.59 (int. for 45 days).

Since the interest was for a period of less than 60 days, the fractional part of 60 or $\frac{45}{60}$, had to be multiplied by \$3.45 in order to find the interest for 45 days, resulting in \$2.5875 or \$2.59. If an interest problem does not come out even after the second decimal, carry it out to two more decimal places, and if the third number after the decimal point in the answer is 5 or more, add 1 to the result.

(2) Find the interest on $725 at 6% for 75 days.

$725 = $7.25 (int. for 60 days)

$$\frac{5}{\frac{75}{60}} \times 7.25 = \frac{$36.25}{4} = $9.0625$$

or $9.06 (int. for 75 days).

To find the interest for 60 days at a rate other than 6%, the following rules will be found helpful.

At 2%, since this is $\frac{1}{3}$ of 6, take $\frac{1}{3}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 3%, since this is $\frac{1}{2}$ of 6, take $\frac{1}{2}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 4%, since this is $\frac{2}{3}$ less than 6, subtract $\frac{1}{3}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 5%, since this is $\frac{5}{6}$ less than 6, subtract $\frac{1}{6}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 7%, since this is $\frac{7}{6}$ more than 6, add $\frac{1}{6}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 8%, since this is $\frac{4}{3}$ more than 6, add $\frac{2}{3}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 9%, since this is $\frac{3}{2}$ more than 6%, add $\frac{1}{2}$ of the interest at 6%.

At 10%, since this is 4% more than 6%, add 4% to that at 6%.

Banker's interest is the same as simple interest except that the exact number of days must be counted instead of using a 30-day month. For example, what would be the banker's interest on $858 at 6% from March 1 to May 9?

Days in March.....31
Days in April.....30
Days in May.....9
70

$858 = $8.58 (int. for 60 days)

$$\frac{70}{60} \times $8.58 = $10.01 \text{ (int. for 70 days).}$$

COMPOUND INTEREST

Compound interest differs from simple interest in that the interest at the end of the year is added to the principal, and each succeeding year's interest calculated on the basis of interest plus principal. For example, what is the compound interest on $2500 for 3 years at 4%?

$2500	$2600	$2704
.04	.04	.04
$100.00	$104.00	$108.16
(int. for 1 yr.)	(int. for 2nd yr.)	(int. for 3rd yr.)
$2704.00
108.16
$2812.16	(int. plus prin. for 3rd yr.)

DISCOUNT

Discount is the interest paid to a bank for converting commercial papers such as drafts, promissory notes, etc., into cash before their date of maturity. This is often called a bank discount. The face of a note or draft is the value of the paper (i.e., the total amount of money involved) minus interest. The value or amount, of a note or draft is what the paper is worth at the date of maturity. The proceeds of a note or draft are the value, less all charges. The discount period is the time (figured in days) between the date of discount and the date of maturity.

The bank discount and proceeds of a commercial paper are found by determining the value of the paper and the bank discount, and subtracting the bank discount from the value. For example, What are the proceeds of a note for $8200 dated May 3, due in 3 months, and discounted by the bank on June 2 at 5%?

Note due August 3

30-2 = 28 days in June

31 days in July

3 days in Aug.

62 days = discount period at 5%

Face of note	= $8200.00
Bank discount on $8200
for 62 days	= 70.61
Proceeds	= $8129.39

Measurements

In business, the two measurements most frequently used are that of area or surface, a two-dimensional product expressed in terms of square inches, square feet, or square yards; and that of volume, a three-dimensional product expressed in terms of cubic inches, cubic feet, or cubic yards.

To find the area of a square or rectangle multiply the length by the width. For instance, How much linoleum is needed to cover a floor 15 feet long and 18 feet wide? Multiply 18 by 15 to get the answer.

To find the area of a triangle, multiply the product of the base and the height, or altitude, by $\frac{1}{2}$. (The altitude of a triangle is a perpendicular dropped from the vertex to the base.) For instance, what is the area of a triangle with an altitude of 5 feet 3 inches and a base of 9 feet 4 inches?

$$5\frac{1}{4} \times 9\frac{1}{3} = \frac{21}{4} \times \frac{28}{3} = \frac{49}{2} = 24\frac{1}{2} \text{ sq. ft.}$$

(It is best to work with a uniform unit of measurement. Hence, since $\frac{3}{12} \leq \frac{1}{4}$ of a foot, and $\frac{4}{12} = \frac{1}{3}$ of a foot, 5 feet 3 inches is changed to $5\frac{1}{4}$ feet and 9 feet 4 inches to $9\frac{1}{3}$ feet.)

To find the area of a circle, divide the product of the circumference and diameter by 4. The circumference of a circle is obtained by multiplying the diameter by π which equals 3.14159 or about $3\frac{1}{7}$. For example, what is the area of a circle having a diameter of 5 feet?

$$\begin{array}{r} 3.14159 (\pi) \\ \times 5 (\text{diameter}) \\ \hline 15.70795 = \text{circumference} \end{array}$$

$$\frac{15.70795 \times 5}{4} = \frac{78.53975}{4} = 19.635 \text{ sq. ft.} = \text{area}$$

To find the volume of a solid, multiply the length by the width by the height. For example, what is the volume of air in a room that is 12 feet high, 10 feet wide, and 14 feet long?

$$12 \times 10 \times 14 = 1680 \text{ cubic feet.}$$

To find the number of board feet in lumber, multiply the length by the width by the thickness. If the board is less than 1 inch thick, consider it as a full inch; if more than 1 inch thick, use exact dimensions. For example, how many board feet are in a piece of wood 20 feet long, 3 feet wide, and $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch thick?

$$20 \times 3 \times 1 = 60 \text{ board feet.}$$

2,000 NAMES AND THEIR MEANINGS

A Practical Guide for Parents and All Others Interested in Better Naming

by ALEXANDER McQUEEN

Using this dictionary, you can interpret the names of over a hundred million Americans. This may sound like an amazing statement, but it is true. Almost everyone in the United States and Canada bears a name that is listed and explained in this dictionary.

So here they are—names by the thousands. Most of them are desirable names; many of them are good enough; a few of them had better not be used. But even the less desirable ones are interesting. This whole business of naming is interesting. From very ancient times fathers and mothers have given careful thought to the names they chose for their little ones, and grown-ups have changed their own names for many different reasons.

Every name has a more or less definite meaning. This is true even of artificial names, made up of sounds that someone thought were pleasing. Such names begin by meaning nothing, but they soon acquire a meaning from the mind and character of the person wearing them.

Every name in this book has been traced to its original language and has been interpreted carefully according to the rules and customs of that language. Some of the conventional meanings, copied by one writer from another for centuries, have been discarded; they were based on mistakes, and repetition has failed to make them true.

When you hand this dictionary to a friend, he or she will probably turn right to the name lists. Soon you may hear remarks such as "Oh, I don't like this one!" That's just as it should be. Nobody will like all the names. But with over 2,000 to choose from, it should be possible to satisfy all tastes.

As you look through the name lists, you may come across some surprises, not all of them welcome. It is disappointing to find that Claudia means "lame," Cecilia "blind," Blaine "lean," Caleb "a dog," Calvin "bald," and Portia "something to do with pigs." However, as these names have occurred in history, they have often acquired new values, based not on the meaning of the words but on the character of the people who bore them. If these new values are important enough, you may decide to forget the original meanings and use the names again.

In the work on this dictionary many problems were encountered. Sometimes a name would be found that seemed to have two entirely opposite meanings, for example, the name Casimir. That name was a poser. It has been interpreted as "preacher of peace" and also as "disturber of peace." The first is based on a verb starting with kaz, meaning "preach, command"; the second, on a verb starting with the same three letters but meaning "hinder, spoil." In both cases the mir means peace. Now what would you do in a case like that? Perhaps we have here a three-way choice: (1) the peaceful meaning, (2) the warlike meaning, (3) both meanings at once, on the theory that real and lasting peace is sometimes gained only by fighting enemies who come, as recorded by Jeremiah, "saying peace, peace, when there is no peace."

Fortunately, not all names are as paradoxical as Casimir. With the aid of 500 dictionaries and 40 years of study in the field of personal names, over 2,000 names were traced to their sources.

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN THIS DICTIONARY OF NAMES

In the lists of names the language indicated by the abbreviation is usually the earliest source of the name. The name itself may be French, German, or Swedish, but if, for example, the abbreviation is (H), the earliest traceable origin is Hebrew.

THE IMPORTANCE OF NAMING

"The giving of names is no small matter, nor should it be left to chance or to persons of mean abilities." SOCRATES

WHY DOES IT MATTER?

The naming of an infant is of more than passing importance because it brings to parents the privilege and duty of bestowing upon their child something that will distinguish it from others and will represent it in a fitting and honorable manner.

Sometimes the baby does not get all the consideration it deserves in this matter of providing it with a permanent name; sometimes it even receives a name that will prove a handicap in later life. As a rule, however, parents are eager to choose desirable names for their offspring, and it is to help such parents that this work was designed.

MOTHER'S OPPORTUNITY

The mother—God bless her—often has the last word when it comes to naming her little ones. And if she should say, "I don't care what you call him, so long as it's Arthur," wisdom might suggest a graceful surrender on the part of the father and all other persons interested in solving the family problem, for if any one person is to make the decision unaided, it should by all means be the one who has already done so much by consecrating herself to the duties of motherhood and whose judgment is guided by the light of mother love.

HOW TO FIND A GOOD NAME

A wise mother is usually willing to listen to anyone who has constructive suggestions about the welfare of her babies. To aid her in making the vital decision, seven rules of naming have been devised. These rules, explained in detail on the following pages, are as follows:

1. The name should be worthy.
2. It should have a good meaning.
3. It should be original.
4. It should be easy to pronounce.
5. It should be distinctive.
6. It should fit the family name.
7. It should indicate the sex.

WHAT IS A WORTHY NAME?

Rule One says that the name should be worthy. It should be based upon the dictates not only of affection but of sound judgment. If the child is regarded as a gift of God, it is worth naming well.

Careful research is employed and large sums of money are expended in the selection or invention of names for new articles of commerce, the idea being to establish a name that will not only identify the article but protect it and represent it creditably. Wise parents are learning to exercise similar care and to confer names that will be a pride and an inspiration to their children. An enthusiast for better naming recently covered the ground rather completely when he exhorted parents to "give your children names indicative of what you would have them be—in this world and in the world to come—and at the same time bear in mind the practical, everyday value of a well-chosen name." It will not be so hard to find common-sense names that measure up to these requirements if we keep in mind the hints embodied in the seven rules.

BIBLE NAMES

The thought might occur to some readers that a simple way to insure the adoption of a "good" name would be to confine their choice to names recorded in the Scriptures. It is true that many Bible names are beautiful and expressive, but good taste must prevail in this as in all other matters. If some of the longer or less familiar scriptural names are given, their careless use may result in drawing ridicule upon the bearer of the name or upon its sacred source. This is true of some names containing rare or unusual sounds and of names that lend themselves easily to distortion or punning. This point should not be unduly stressed, but it may be illustrated by several names that by reason of their inherent holiness should be kept beyond the likelihood of unseemly treatment: Hezekiah, meaning "strength of the Lord"; Eliphalet, "God of salvation"; Bezaleel, "in the shadow of God."

WORTHY AND UNWORTHY NAMES

A good name will inspire respect in the minds of others because of its pleasant sound or associations, and it will inspire in its owner pride and the desire to be really worthy of it. As specimens of names that can hardly be called worthy in this sense we may mention such names as Quintus, Sextus, Septimus, and Octavius, which are merely numbers meaning "fifth," "sixth," "seventh," and "eighth." Such arithmetical terms, usually not employed until the fifth child comes, might almost suggest that the accumulating of a family has become a bore.

WHY DOES THE MEANING MATTER?

According to Rule Two, the name should have a good meaning or at least a pleasant or harmless association. The reason for this will be apparent to most readers, but there are some considerations in naming that are often overlooked. Few parents would call a child Judas (a name of good meaning but tragic or sad association) or Benoni ("son of my sorrow"), but many have inflicted on their innocent babes the names of battles or of political events of passing interest. An infant receives its name when it is helpless; parents should be considerate and should refrain from wishing anything onto their child that might cause embarrassment later.

FAMOUS NAMES

If family names happen to be those of famous persons, such as Shakespeare, Lincoln, or Nightingale, the children are not helped by calling them William, Abraham, or Florence. When they grow up they will not want to be annoyed, in season and out, by the empty remarks of people who pay more attention to the name than to the person.

SOME GOOD NAMES NOT FAVORED

It is by some people deemed wise to avoid the use of certain very good names that, on account of our strange modern sense of humor, have come to be regarded as effeminate. Of these we might mention Percival, Algernon, Cecil, and Reginald—all of them really splendid names. Perhaps a remote origin of their disrepute may be found in the contemptuous attitude of the rugged Anglo-Saxons toward their somewhat dandified Norman conquerors.

WATCH THE INITIALS

The initials of a name should not form unpleasant or undignified words. Martin Ulysses Taylor is sure to be nicknamed "Mutt," and Sydney Alfred Lee will doubtless be known as "Sally."

HUMOR IN NAMING

In naming there is no place for humor. Life is real, life is earnest; naming is a serious, though not necessarily cheerless, affair. Of course, there have been cases where parents have purposely given funny names to their children—for example, when a first child was called Peter and the second child Re-peater, and when the father of a large and expensive family insisted on naming one of the boys Bill "because he came on the first of the month." Many other cases could be quoted—some of them so absurd as to be hardly believable —but sensible parents will not want to follow such examples, and it is perhaps just as well not to give any more of them here.

WHY NOT USE IMAGINATION?

Rule Three suggests that the name should be as original as possible without being eccentric. A certain article of furniture we call chair; another article of furniture we call stool. They are not the same, but they are both designed to sit upon and are near enough alike to be classed as first cousins. Mark you—they are similar but named differently. Now we come to two men. One of them is rich and fat and fair and slow and stupid; the other is poor and thin and dark and quick and intelligent. And we call one of them John, and the other—John. Altogether dissimilar, but named alike. This is simply another way of stating that human beings are named with less variety and imagination than inanimate objects—less discrimination in naming the lords of creation than in naming stocks and stones.

An ideal condition would be for every individual to have a name indicating not only his character but his place and function in society; but as such exactness is hardly possible this side of eternity, we have to be satisfied with a very limited assortment of names, unless we are bold enough to invent new ones for the babies.

In ancient times the giving of made-up or invented names was an ordinary occurrence. In the Old Testament we are told "And Adam called his wife's name Eve ('life'), because she was the mother of all living." "And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him . . . Isaac"; this name referred to the laughter, both of disbelief and joy, that preceded and followed the birth of the son of the patriarch's old age.

HOW TO INVENT NAMES

Invent really means "find," and the new names of which we are speaking are the easiest things in the world to find if parents will only use their powers of reflection and observation. For example, if the coming of a baby girl is connected in the parents' mind with some notable act of Providence, it is not necessary to follow the example of our Puritan predecessors and call the child The Lord Will Provide; the idea can be expressed beautifully and adequately in the name Provida (pronounced "pro-veda"), which someone has already invented and used. With imagination and common sense it is possible to invent excellent names.

NEW NAMES FOR NEW CHILDREN

While the motive of this book is by no means that of supplanting all traditional and time-honored names, it is written with the idea that every baby, even at birth, has an identity of its own, which can be fittingly recognized by giving it a new name or a new combination of names.

SOUND AND SPELLING

Rule Four suggests that the name should be easy to pronounce by persons of average education. This rule may not be as important as the others; however, if several names seem equally attractive, it is well to choose one easy to pronounce. It is sometimes wise to avoid trouble from the start by making the spelling fit the pronunciation. In a name like Phoebe, for instance, the silent o may just as well be dropped, for it serves only to remind scholars that the name used to be pronounced "Foiby."

FOREIGN NAMES

When for some reason it is deemed necessary to use a name from a language quite unlike our own (such as the Polish language), a change in spelling will often help. For example, the Polish cz can be changed to ch; sz can be changed to sh; and other unusual combinations can be simplified.

VARIATIONS

Difference in pronunciation is not always a sign of incorrectness. Take the name Viola; Shakespearean students and actors accent the first syllable and pronounce the i as in vine. Others, with equal correctness, call it "Vee-o-la," with stress on the o.

When pronouncing unfamiliar names listed in this dictionary, it will usually be safe to give the vowels their Italian sounds.

"COMMON" PROPER NAMES

According to Rule Five, the name should be easily distinguishable from names of others in the same family or community. Centuries ago a newly converted monarch in eastern Europe caused his subjects to be baptized in batches. All in a given batch received the same Christian name—hundreds of Johns, hundreds of Thomases, hundreds of Marys, Ruths, and so forth. A study of some of our modern city directories, on the pages devoted to certain well-known surnames, might lead us to suppose that this labor-saving custom still prevails. Go into any large assemblage, such as a baseball crowd, and shout "Jack!" or "Bill!" You will probably be amazed at the number of men and boys who will turn immediately to respond to your call.

THE USE OF JUNIOR

The custom of naming after parents and relatives has been a potent factor in the duplication—indeed, multiplication—of the same name in a community. While it has seemed natural, especially in the case of sons, to give the name of a parent, the practice is attended with some real difficulties in modern times. Modern young men begin to "cut a figure" in the world early in life, occupying a prominent place in business and social activities. The use of the suffix Junior is often overlooked. Father and son (sometimes even grandpa!) are constantly opening one another's letters, and occasions for confusion and embarrassment are multiplied. More than one case is on record in which a son has voluntarily dropped one of his two given names merely to avoid such inconveniences.

DYNASTIC NAMES

John Brown I, John Brown II, John Brown III—here we have one attempt to overcome the trouble caused by copying the parent's name. But it does not deserve encouragement in our progressive and individualistic age. All things considered, it is better not to give children exactly the same names as their parents or other relatives. A child ought not to be an exact duplicate (mental, moral, or spiritual) of its parents. It should be better, and its name ought not to tie it too definitely to the limitations of the past.

ANOTHER HINT

If the reason for naming after a certain person seems to be weighty (expectation of a legacy, for instance!) it is sometimes possible to compromise satisfactorily by substituting a modification for the original name, for instance, Anita for Anna; Jean for John; Georgette or Georgia for Georgina; and so forth.

DUPLICATE INITIALS

The choice of names with the same initials should be avoided, especially in the case of brothers. Similar names or similar initials cause particular confusion when applied to twins, as for instance in the case of two privates in the same Ohio regiment in World War I who had been christened Idea A. Brown and Aden I. Brown. The similarity caused them an unlimited amount of trouble in their business transactions.

LONG NAMES

In the search for distinctiveness it is well to avoid the giving of many names to one child. Properly chosen, two names are plenty. In fact, one is enough if it is a good name and serves well to identify its bearer. An extreme example is recorded in the case of a Portuguese princess born early in the 19th century, who was christened Maria Jose Beatrix Joanna Eulalie Leopoldina Adelaide Isabel Carlotta Michaela Raphaela Gabriela Francisca Paula Inez Sophia Joaquina Theresa Benedicta Bernarda—a total of 20 names and 141 letters. This young lady would have been popular in ancient Greece or Rome, where fashionable young men were in the habit of pledging their sweetheart's health in as many cups of wine as there were letters in her name.

Prominent men often drop one or more of their names to add distinction or help the rhythm, as, for example, Charles (John Huffham) Dickens and (Thomas) Woodrow Wilson.

HOW TO HELP THE FAMILY NAME

Rule Six dictates that the given name ought to fit the family name or, at least, not clash with it.

A distinctive given name is of great service to a person with a common family name. The word common is used here merely to indicate such names as Smith, Brown, Jones, Robinson, and Johnson, which for historical reasons are borne by many thousands of families. When the Johnson parents name their baby John, they are simply piling up trouble for his grown-up life, in the shape of wrongly delivered letters, vexatious errors and delays, and general difficulty in keeping his identity clear in the public mind. In one eastern city alone there are more than 300 John Johnsons.

Family names draw honor and renown from the lives and behavior of their owners; therefore, all such names—however derived, pronounced, or spelled—may be counted honorable and satisfactory. Some people, however, bear names that they consider awkward or undignified, and they can usually improve the effect of such names, in the case of their children, by a careful choice of given names.

AMERICAN NAMES

All names, no matter what their origin, might be regarded as American names. But in an English-speaking nation there is an inclination to class as foreign such names as do not have an Anglo-Saxon sound. There are many exceptions, of course. Hundreds of continental European names have become household words in our midst; but the fact remains that certain names look or sound strange to the average modern American.

FOREIGN FAMILY NAMES

A safe plan with foreign family names is to use simple given names that fit the family name and to take care to choose names reasonably familiar in the New World. One thing is certain: We ought never to make such unnatural combinations as Denis Schultz or Fritz De la Rue.

SHORT NAMES

Short family names are often helped by the use of given names with two or more syllables. To use two familiar examples from legal language, how much better Richard Roe sounds than John Doe! Tom Brown may be a good enough name, but it lacks distinction and originality. Hilary Brown or Theodore Brown are combinations that set off the surname much better. They save the name from being very ordinary and, at the same time, are not elaborate enough to be considered eccentric. A glance at the Brown, Smith, or Jones section of any large city directory will show the force of this argument.

LONG NAMES

On the other hand, if the surname is long, it is better to avoid a long given name. Sophonsiba Cunningham and Cornelius J. Langenbrenner would sound better as Rita Cunningham and Otto, or David, Langenbrenner.

HE OR SHE?

According to Rule Seven, the name should indicate the sex of the child. There is no law to compel the giving of masculine names to boys and feminine names to girls. Even in ancient times some men were named Mehetabel and some women were named Gomer. In Latin countries the sex is sometimes disregarded, and boys may receive the name of a female saint if they are born on her name day. In the United States there have sometimes been men named Florence, either after the city or from a family name, and such names as Marion and Marian are applied indiscriminately to infants of both sexes.

When one considers the wide material to choose from (more than 2,000 names in this dictionary alone), it seems a pity to give children names that are not immediately recognized as masculine or feminine when written or pronounced.

HERE'S TO THE MOTHERS!

But after all these do's and don'ts and warnings, we come back to where we started—to the good judgment and loving care of the mothers. Here's to the mothers! May they name their infants as they please—and may they please to accept this dictionary in the friendly spirit in which it is offered.

FAVORITE NAMES AND THEIR MEANINGS

Dear names,
And thousand others throng to me! . . . RUPERT BROOKE

During the writing of this dictionary, which is based on long years of study and research, an interesting discovery was made: Of the more than 2,000 names in our list, two dozen of them would include the names of about a third of the population of the United States. Those names, in the order of their estimated popularity, are: (for girls) Mary, Elizabeth, Barbara, Dorothy, Helen, Margaret, Ruth, Virginia, Jean, Frances, Nancy, and Patricia; (for boys) John, William, Charles, James, George, Robert, Thomas, Henry, Peter, Joseph, Edward, and Samuel. The author decided to take those 24 names, plus some other frequently used names, and write a few words about the meaning of each of them. Following are the descriptions of those favorite names for girls and boys. For convenience, the names in each list have been arranged in alphabetical order.

GIRLS

Alice is derived from Teutonic names based on Adal- or Adel-, meaning "noble." It has sometimes been translated "noble cheer," but the German Adelheid suggests that it means "nobility." Variations of the popular name are Adelaide, Adeline, Adela, and Adeliza.

Anna, in 50 or more forms, is from the Hebrew Hannah, relating to "grace, mercy." It was the name of the mother of Samuel. Variations include Nan, Anka (Serbian), and Panni (Hungarian).

Barbara is usually interpreted as meaning "a stranger." It is of Greek origin, and the theory is that the ancient Greeks thought the speech of foreigners sounded like bar-bar-bar. Such language, they said, was "barbaric," and the people who spoke it were "barbarians." If one of the babbling strangers happened to be a woman and pretty, she too was a "barbarian," but the word then took on a friendlier meaning. When uttered by men, it might even turn into some pet name, such as Barbara. It's as simple as that.

An early form of the name in England and America was Barbary, now heard only in a few traditional ballads. Popular modern variants are Babs and Babbie.

Bernice is a Greek name meaning "bringing victory." The nice refers to "victory." In Greek it is spelled nike; in military aviation a nike jet is a victory jet. The soldiers rhyme nike with Mikey, but the final syllable in Bernice should rhyme with lease.

Carol, if derived from Greek, means "a song of joy." It is associated also with the word choral and with dancing, for in ancient times singing and dancing often went together. However, Carol and Caroline are also forms of the Teutonic name Charles, which means "a man." To avoid calling a feminine Carol a man, the interpretation "strong, vigorous" is used.

Dolores means "sorrow" or "sorrows." The name is usually associated with "Our Lady of Sorrows." It is popular in all the Latin countries and is spelled in many ways.

Doris is one of the familiar Dor- names that come from the Greek word for "a gift." Examples are Dora, Dorea, Dorothy. The last-named means "gift of God" and is reversed in Theodora, with the same meaning. Doris is sometimes regarded as a "gift" name, but it is really the name of a district in ancient Greece, so Doris might mean simply "a Dorian." Doris in mythology was a daughter of Oceanus. When Doris is derived from the Lithuanian language, it means "noble, courageous."

Dorothy is another name of Greek origin. It means "gift of God," the same as Theodora. In each case the theo part stands for "God" and the dora for "gift."

Once upon a time, three or four centuries ago, a little girl gave this name to her most valued possession, a toy baby. But Dorothy was hard to say, and the child was content to say "Dolly." That's how we got one of our most popular names. Dolls have been "dollies" ever since, and many Dorothys have been described as "dolls."

Edith is a Teutonic name. The ed in the name (as in Edward, Edgar, Edmund) means "rich." The -ith is from an old word meaning "gift." So Edith means "rich gift."

Elizabeth is another name that needs some explanation. In the list it is rendered simply as

"worshiper of God." This is the general meaning of the name. In its original Hebrew form, Elisheva, it contains the idea of an oath and of the number seven. Eli refers to God; sheva to an oath or seven. In ancient times seven and an oath were related because they both typified completion and consecration. A covenant was completed by the swearing of an oath. Seven was regarded as a most holy number, indicating fullness; it is so regarded to this day. Learned Hebrew scholars have given several interpretations of this name: "God of the seven," "oath of my God," "God is her oath." All of them suggest a dedication to the worship of God.

There are many variations of Elizabeth, all the way from the Estonian Elts in one syllable to the Russian Yelissaveta in five. Some of the more usable variants are found in this dictionary.

Evelyn is sometimes regarded as a variant of Eve, but it really comes from a Keltic word meaning "pleasant, agreeable." In some cases it has been related to the Latin avellana, the filbert or hazelnut, possibly accounting for the modern popularity of Hazel as a girl's name. The spelling of the name varies a good deal—Evolyn, Evelina, and so forth. Occasionally the name Evelyn is given to a man.

Florence and its other forms, such as Flora, Florie, Flo, and Flossie, simply mean "flourishing." Some men have been named Florence, perhaps after a masculine saint or from the city of that name.

Frances means "free." France, the name of a great nation, is really of Teutonic origin and is probably related to a group of ancient words beginning with the sound fr- and meaning "love, joy, frolicking, freedom, and peace." What a book could be written on Frances and Frank and their origins! Variants of Frances include Francesca, Francina, Fanchon, and many others in our list of names.

Gertrude means "spear-maiden." It is one of the many battle-names invented long ago. Ger occurs in many names with the meaning of "spear"; it appears as gar in the name of the garfish. Gertrude has a number of variations and diminutives, including the familiar Trudy, Trudchen (German), Traudl (Bavarian), Trudje (Dutch), Truta (Estonian), and Giertrude (Polish).

Harriet is the feminine form of Harry or Henry. Harry is interpreted as "master of the home," so Harriet would be "mistress of the home."

Helen is another Greek name, derived from a word meaning "sunlight." It is one of the most popular feminine names of modern times; indeed, it has been popular in many lands through the centuries. Its fame has been extended by many noted ladies, including Helen of Troy, St. Helena, Elaine of the Round Table, and countless others. We have it in such variants as Eleanor, Eleonore, Elinor, and even Alienor, also Leonore, Lenore, Eileen, Ellen, Nelly, and a score of related forms. They all share their origin with Helios, the name of the Greek sun god, and with heliotrope, a plant reputed to turn (tropein) with the sun.

Irene means "peace." The name has grown steadily in popularity in the 20th century. This word, from the Greek eirene, used as a greeting, corresponds to the Hebrew shalom. In Palestine, in the 1st century A.D., the two greetings were often interchangeable.

Jean is one of the countless feminine variations of John, and therefore it means "the Lord is gracious." In French this form is masculine, with Jeanne for the feminine. Some of the principal variants are Johanna, Joan (properly one syllable), Jenny, Janet, Juanita. Others will be found in the list of names. Reference is also suggested to our little essay on the name John.

Josephine is the feminine of Joseph, which is explained at length in the stories about men's names. Its general meaning is "addition" or "increase."

Katharine is a Greek name with about a hundred variations, all the way from English Kate to Russian Ekaterina. They all mean "pure." Some unusual forms are Kadi (Bavarian), Tri (Swiss, using the middle of the name only), Kasia (Polish), Katelik (Breton), Kaatje (Dutch), Gaton (French), and Karin (Swedish).

Lois is sometimes mistakenly regarded as a variant of Louis or Louise, but it is really a Greek New Testament name, usually translated "better, agreeable."

Louise is a popular name in what is loosely termed the Western world. Like Ludwig and Louis, it is a warlike name, generally given the meaning "famous in battle." The first syllable stands for "fame"; -wig refers to "battle."

Lucille and its variant forms are derived from Lux, the Latin word for "light" (as of the sun). It occurs as Lucy, Lucia, Lucinda, Lucienne, Luciana, and so forth.

Margaret is a "pearl," at least according to her name in Greek. The name, in one form or another, is known in many countries. It can be as long as ten letters, the Italian Margherita, or as short as three, the Scottish Meg. From its first syllable are derived forms like Meg and Madge; from its ending, the Estonian name Kret. Its 60 or more variants include Maisie, Maggie, Peggy, Meta, Greta, Gretel, Gretchen, Rita, and even an inelegant and somewhat rare English form, Grüty.

Mary, like the correspondingly important masculine name John, is of Hebrew origin. It first occurred in the form of Miriam. In Exod. 15:20 is the familiar account of how "Miriam the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, took a timbrel in her hand" and led the women of Israel, with timbrels and dances, in a song of thanksgiving for deliverance from the Egyptians.

In one form or another, Mary is a name revered by Christian, Jew, and Moslem. Various meanings have been assigned to it, most of them without proper foundation. Some were suggested by great and good men in the days before language study had become a science. One ingenious guess followed another, with all lovers of the name Mary veering away from the fact that its original meaning was not a pleasant one. Let us face the facts; perhaps they're not so dreadful, after all.

This Hebrew name, Miriam, became Mariam in the Greek language and Maria in Latin, whence our Mary. In its original Hebrew the name indicated "rebellion, bitterness." One form of the name, Mara, appears in the first chapter of Ruth, where Naomi says, "Call me not Naomi, call me Mara; for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." The Israelites could not drink of the waters of the brook Marah for they were mariym, that is, "bitter."

But even bitterness can lead to good. And once again Hebrew shows the way. For the word meaning "bitter" is related to mor, meaning "myrrh." Myrrh indeed is bitter; but when it is used for perfume or incense, it is sweet. Myrrh is also used in worship for anointing and in medicine for healing. So within the obvious translation, "bitterness," there is preserved a sense of sweetness. In any case, this is a name of scriptural origin and of profound importance.

In Ireland about a fifth of the women are named Mary, sometimes spelled in the Gaelic fashion, Maire. Another form, not used in christening, is Muire, reserved exclusively for the Blessed Virgin Mary. Many variants will be found in the list in this dictionary.

Mildred means "mild counsel." It is of Old English origin and has been interpreted "mild threatener," because an early form was spelled Mildthryth. Modern researchers, however, trace the second syllable from Old English raed, meaning "advice, counsel."

Nancy, a variant of Hannah, is of Hebrew origin and means "grace, mercy." In its original form the name was pronounced Kha-nah, with some stress on the second syllable. As one nation after another adopted it, changes took place; it now exists in many forms, 70 or more, ranging from Ann to Annushka. Popular forms are Anna, Annette, and Anita.

Patricia means "a patrician, a noble lady." It is, of course, the feminine form of Patrick, famed for its connection with the patron saint of Ireland. The original patricians were descended from the patres, or fathers of their country, Rome. Our modern Patricias share with Patrick the nickname of Pat.

Phyllis is a Greek name meaning "green leaf, green foliage." The name was used by oldtime poets as typifying a rustic sweetheart.

Rose is a popular name in many lands because of the beauty of the rose, in bud or in full bloom. Several variations are given in our alphabetical list, all with the simple floral interpretation. However, in ancient times the rose was used as an emblem of love in its purest form—the lasting love in happy marriages.

Ruth is interpreted as "beauty." It comes from a Hebrew word meaning "appearance, vision (understood to be a vision of beauty)." The original Ruth, whose touching story is told in the Bible book bearing her name, was an ancestress of King David.

It might be well to note that the name Ruth can also be drawn from another source, for the word in English signifies "compassion, sorrow for the misfortunes of another." We speak of a heartless person as one who is ruthless; for one who is merciful, we can properly use the word ruthful.

From the Hebrew, beauty—from Old English, extending back into Icelandic, compassion—and both of them are joined in the name Ruth.

Sarah (meaning "princess") was the name of the wife of Abraham. She was originally named Sarai. Some writers have supposed this to mean "contentious," because of her long childlessness. Perhaps a better theory is that Sarai meant "my princess" and that the new name, Sarah, with the letter h taken from the most holy name, Jehovah, was conferred because of the promise that she was to be the mother of nations. Thus she was ordained to be a princess par excellence, without the limiting pronoun my. Of the many variants of this name the most popular is Sally.

Sylvia, described by Shakespeare in his Two Gentlemen of Verona as kind and fair and generally desirable, bore a name that has been given to many modern girls. Latin in origin, it means "one who lives in the woods," or a "forester." A diminutive is Sylvie.

Virginia is often related to the colony and state of Virginia, named after Elizabeth, "The Virgin Queen," but it is really of another derivation. Even as Virgil was originally Vergil, Virginia was originally Verginia. Ver was the word for "springtime." Beaumont and Fletcher, oldtime poet-playwrights, sang of "Primrose, firstborn child of Ver, merry springtime's harbinger." So Ver meant "spring" even in our own language. Our vernal breeze is the refreshing breeze of springtime. The spirit of the name Virginia is the ideal of awakening life, of new beginnings, of re-creation.

BOYS

Abraham is an important name with a fascinating history. The founder of the Hebrew people was originally named Abram (Ab, "father"; ram, "height"), translated as "father of elevation" or "exalted father." But when he was ordained to be "a father of many nations" (Gen. 17:5), his name was changed to Abraham, which involved the addition of the letter H from the most holy name, Jehovah, H being regarded as neither vowel nor consonant but as the very breath of life.

Anthony is derived from the Latin Antonius. It has been translated as "deserving praise," also "beyond praise" or "inestimable." Variants are Anton (German, Russian), Antonin (Czech), Antonino (Italian), Antonio (Italian, Spanish), Antoine (French), Anthonius (Dutch), and Antel (Hungarian). The usual modern diminutive is Tony.

Charles, interpreted as meaning "manly, strong," really means "man." However, it was often used admiringly as a given name to signify "What a man!" Perhaps the most noted wearer of the name was Charles the Great, remembered by the Germans as Karl der Grosse and by the French as Charlemagne. In his day he ruled them both, which ought to give them something to agree about, for Frenchmen and Germans alike regard him as a national hero.

Our English word churl, meaning "one who is surly," was originally a form of Charles. Charles kept its high meaning, but churl came down in the world. Among other forms of the name are Carl, Carlo, Karel, and, in Irish, Searlas.

Clarence, like all clar-names, is derived from Latin clarus, "clear" or "bright." The name dates back to the 14th century, when the Norman family name Clare was amplified into Clarence. By the 16th century Clarence had become a baptismal name in England.

Donald is an ancient Celtic name meaning "world-mighty." Customary diminutives are Don and Donnie.

Edward means "rich guardian." Ed is from an Old English word for "wealth, property." Ward is "guard," just as warranty is "guarantee"; w and gu are often interchangeable. A glance at our dictionary list will show several other Ed-names. Sometimes Ed was considered to mean "blessed," as in Edric, presumably on the theory that blessings are spiritual riches.

Variations include Eduard, Edoardo, Edvard, and a score of others. Diminutives are Eddie, Neddy, Ned, and sometimes Teddy; but the last-named belongs properly to Theodore.

Elmer is a Teutonic name. An early form joined two words—adel, "noble," and mar, "fame." "Noble fame" is the usual modern interpretation. Elmer as a baptismal name has gained in popularity in the 20th century, especially in the United States.

Elvis is a variant of the Teutonic Elvin, meaning "elf-friend." Elves were supposed to be wise, so all elv-names carry a suggestion of "wisdom."

Eugene is a complimentary name, fashioned from two Greek words: eu, "good, well," and genes, "born." It brings to mind the science of eugenics, which concerns itself with the improvement of offspring. The customary diminutive is Gene.

George, which is of Greek origin, means "man of the earth," "man of the land," or "farmer." The ge- in this name means "earth," and the rest of the word means "to work, or till, the soil." The personal name in Greek is Georgios. The ge-element is found in our word geography, which has to do with the earth, and also in geometry, geology, geophysics, and many others.

In view of the fact that George can mean "farmer," it may be interesting to note that the nickname "Farmer George" was given to George III of England and to his great adversary, George Washington. Both men were keenly interested in farming. Washington was one of America's most progressive farmers; he read every farm book he could find, including one by Samuel Deans, of Massachusetts, entitled The New England Farmer, or Georgical Dictionary, where again we see the Greek Georg- used in its original sense.

There are more than 50 variations of the name, including Jorge, Jurgen, Joris, Jerzy, and Egor.

Henry suggests "real estate." It has been derived from two Teutonic origins, Hagen-rich and Heim-rich. The first means "master of the enclosure," referring to the entire homestead or estate; the second means "master of the home," referring to the inside of the house. The two amount to just about the same thing; they hint that the man is boss. (But what about Henrietta!)

Like most other popular names, Henry comes in a variety of forms—all the way from shorties like English Hal and German Hein to the long-drawn out Italian Arriguccio. Familiar forms are the Dutch and Danish Hendrik, the French Henri, the Spanish and Portuguese Enrique, and the Italian Enrico.

Herbert is a Teutonic name meaning "bright warrior," the second syllable standing for "bright."

An early form was the Frankish name Charibert, later Haribert. The Norsemen used many her- or har- names.

Howard is a name of Teutonic origin, meaning "sword-guardian" (Heoru-gard). Some early forms of the name favor the theory that it sometimes had the general meaning of "steward." A familiar modern diminutive is Howie.

Hugh is a Teutonic name relating to "mind, thought, study." In other forms it is Hugo (Spanish, Portuguese) or Ugo (Italian). It is related to the modern name Hubert, meaning "bright mind."

Jacob, in Hebrew Ya-a-kov, means literally "one who takes hold by the heel" and so trips up his adversary. It is often translated "supplanter," which is virtually the same thing, for the Latin supplantare means "to slip something under the sole of another's foot," thus "to trip him up." A modern form of this name is James.

James is really a form of the Hebrew Jacob, meaning "a supplanter," one who trips another up or takes his place, as Jacob did when he was unfair to Esau, his brother. Esau spoke of this in his complaint, "Is not he rightly named Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times."

Best known in English-speaking lands as James, Jim, Jimmy, and Jamie, the name is Seamus (Shamus) in Irish and Jacques in French. In Spanish it is Jayme, Diego, and Iago. Santiago, name of several cities, means "Saint James."

John is the most important given name in the lands that we are pleased to call the civilized nations. In the United States, for instance, it is the name of one twenty-fifth of the entire male population.

If a good name is better than riches, John must be a very good name. In its original Hebrew form it means "the Lord is gracious" or "the Lord is merciful"; therefore, to the millions who bear the name, it should come as a sort of blessing. In the benediction "The Lord make his face to shine upon thee and be gracious unto thee," the word for "gracious" is related to an element in the name John. In Hebrew the name was Yeho-khanan, with some stress on the final syllable. The first part is a form of the name Jehovah; the second part is "gracious, merciful."

In different lands John has taken different forms, not all of them spelled with the letter J; for example, Ain, Evan, Giovanni, Hansi, Ian, Ivan, Nuccio, Ohannes, Sean, Vanni, Yanos, and Zanni. Under the letter J alone it is easy to collect scores of different John-names, such as the Persian Jehan, the Hungarian Janos, the Spanish Juan, the Dutch and Polish Jan, and some familiar American names we may never have connected with John. A good-sized book could be written on the name John, a name sacred in the past and inspiring in the present.

Joseph is a name with the general meaning of "addition" or "increase," and it is universally regarded as a name of good fortune. The use of this name in the Scriptures for one of the sons of Jacob is referred to in Gen. 30:24 where Rachel rejoiced, "And she called his name Joseph, and said, The Lord shall add to me another son." The other son was to be Benjamin; but the one who bore the name of addition was Joseph, pronounced in the original Hebrew Yosef. This simple form of the name is variously translated as "gathering," "addition," "increase," "he will add," and "whom may God increase." However, the name is sometimes given in a more complete form, pronounced Yeho-sef. Here the syllables Yeho are a clear indication of the most holy name, Jehovah; hence, the most impressive interpretation is "Jehovah shall add." In this complete form the name comes as a promise of blessing from the Almighty.

Variants are many. In Europe they include such diverse forms as Jose, Giuseppe, Sepperl, and Ossip; throughout the Arab world there are Yusufs by the hundred thousand, perhaps by the million, all happy to possess a name of good omen.

Laurence, in its various forms, is usually traced back to the Latin word laurus, "the laurel," and is assumed to mean "laurel-crowned." A popular nickname is Larry.

Martin, derived from the Latin Martinus, is connected with Mars and therefore is translated "warlike." Variants include Martino (Italian, Spanish), Martinho (Portuguese), Martili (Swiss), Martijn (Dutch), Martoni (Hungarian). Popular diminutives are Marty and Mart.

Michael is a Biblical name meaning "Who is like unto God," which may be taken as a question or an affirmation, in either case stressing the uniqueness of the deity. Three Hebrew words are involved: Mi ("who"), kha ("like"), and El ("God"). Variants are Michel (French), Miguel (Spanish), Michail (Russian), and Mihaly (Hungarian). Popular diminutives are Mike, Mickey, Mikey.

Nathan is Hebrew for "gift." Nathaniel means "gift of God" or "my gift is God." A popular modern diminutive is Nat.

Oliver is from Oliva, Latin for "olive," "olive tree," or "olive branch." Many children have been given names derived from this word, perhaps because the ancients believed the olive to be an emblem of love in its highest sense. The related idea of peace was established when a dove, as recorded in Gen. 8:11, brought an olive leaf to Noah.

Oscar is a name with two interpretations. When of Teutonic origin, it means "divine spear"; when of Keltic origin, it means "one who leaps forward in battle" or "a champion." In modern times there are no familiar variants of this name.

Peter is a name of prime importance in Christian lands. It is derived from the Greek petra, "a rock." It still means "a rock," but it is generally accepted as a symbol of firmness. In a theological sense Peter means "faith," especially the faith on which Christianity was founded. In John 1:42 it is written: "And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon, the son of Jona; thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, a stone." As might be expected, this statement is full of meaning. The man's name had been Simon, which in Hebrew means "hearing" or "obedience." Naturally one has to hear before he can receive faith; therefore, he was first Simon and afterward Peter. The other name, Cephas, is simply the Aramaic word for "a rock," related to Hebrew Kephah with the same meaning.

Peter occurs in many languages, varying all the way from Swedish Per to Italian Petrucchio, which latter is a modification of the customary Pietro. Perhaps the best known variant is the French Pierre.

Philip is a Greek name meaning a "lover of horses." The phil refers to "love"; hip, from the Greek hippos, means "horse." A hippodrome is a course where horses run. A hippopotamus is a horse of the river (Greek potamos).

Ralph, more correctly spelled Ralf, is a Teutonic name meaning "wolf," or, if it is considered a short form of Randolph, it means a "shield-wolf," referring to the wolf's head often featured at the center of a circular shield. In ancient times a wolf-name was honorable because of the strength of the animal. An old-fashioned variant is Rafe.

Raymond is a Teutonic name meaning "wise protection" (ragin, "counsel"; mund, "protection"). Variants include Raimond (French), Raimondo (Italian), and Ramon (Spanish). A modern diminutive is Ray.

Robert means "bright in fame." In ancient times it was made up of hrwod, meaning "flame," and percht, or some such word, meaning "bright." Luckily for us, it was gradually worn down to Robert, which is easier to say. Modern variations include Rupert, Bob, and Robin. As Roberta, the name has been popular with the ladies, who have also borrowed Robin.

Samuel means "heard of God," or "asked for of God." It is the name of a great man who served Israel as judge, counselor, and prophet. When he was born, after his childless mother had prayed for offspring, "she called his name Samuel, because (she said) I have asked him of the Lord." The first part of the name refers to "hearing"; the ending, El, is the word for "God." It is so in many Hebrew names, as in Gamaliel, "reward of God," and Bethel, "house of God."

The "hearing" element in this name is suggested throughout the story of Samuel. When he was a small boy, serving in the temple, and the voice of God came to him in the night watches, he responded, "Speak, for thy servant heareth." When he became a man, his counsel was heard, though not always followed, by all Israel.

This name occurs in many languages without much variation in form. Sometimes it is heard in authentic Hebrew, Sh'mu-el, with a slight stress on the sacred closing syllable.

Stephen is derived from the Greek stephanos, "a crown," referring chiefly to the wreath of laurels or other leaves awarded to Greek youths for winning a contest. Some variants are Etienne (French), Stefano (Italian), Esteban (Spanish), and Istvan (Hungarian).

Thomas is a twin. That is to say, the name is derived from the Aramaic Tama, "twofold, twin," and perhaps earlier from the Hebrew Tomim, "twins." The Thomas of the Scriptures was sometimes called Didymus, a Greek name with the same meaning. His mind is said to have been as twofold as his name, causing him to be something of a skeptic—hence the expression "Doubting Thomas." Thomas is a good name, nevertheless, and has been borne by many famous men. Its familiar forms include Tom and Tommy, also the Scottish Tam, as in Tam-o-Shanter.

William is an important name in many languages. In the days of William the Conqueror and his son William Rufus, it became very popular. In 12th-century England there were almost seven times as many Williams as Johns.

In 1173 at a court feast of the English King Henry II, 120 knights were guests, all named William. In France in 1300 a chevalier named Guillaume visited Rouen on the 10th of January, the feast day of St. William. It is recorded that he invited all knights named William or Guillaume to dine with him, and 300 turned up. So it was a popular name in France as well.

Of Teutonic origin, the name is related to two Old English words, Wil, meaning "will, resolve," and Helm, meaning "helmet, defense." It can, therefore, be interpreted as meaning "resolute defense" or "resolute helmet."

The most popular short forms are Will and Bill; in Dutch the name is streamlined into Willem, which may then be reduced to Wim. In the Romance languages there are various forms spelled with Gu-; in the Slavic tongues there are some examples in V. A few usable variants are found in our list of names.

SOME POPULAR NAMES FOR GIRLS

The preceding pages present somewhat detailed discussions of the meanings of some favorite names for girls and boys. The following lists give the meanings of many other names. Often several variants of a name are given. It is interesting that most of these popular names come from the sacred languages—

Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. This is not surprising, for names tend to be traditional, and many of the world's traditions were established when these three languages served most of the civilized nations. The meanings of the abbreviations used in the following list are given on the opening page of this Dictionary of Names.
